LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At the Battleship Cove party, clockwise from top: Joanna Datillo and Dick Flavin; Alexander Haig and Jesse Ventura; John Mustin, Eddie Logan and Armando Correa; a shot of Battleship Cove

PERMISSION TO COME ABOARD...

It was like the set-up for a bad political joke: "So Alexander Haig and Jesse Ventura go to a party on a battleship..."

Yet there they were—the former secretary of state and retired general, and the ex–professional wrestler and Minnesota governor—at Battleship Cove, the naval museum in Fall River (which is well worth checking out if you've never been there).

Rather than offering fodder for Republican-bashing, the evening turned out to be a nonpartisan bash, and a good one at that, in celebration of Victory at Sea, a two-day yacht regatta.

Also gathered on the fantail for cocktails, dinner and dancing: the evening's co-chairs, Red Sox Hall of Famer Dom DiMaggio and his scintillating wife, Emily; political satirist (and the evening's emcee) Dick Flavin squiring the exquisitely lovely Joanna Datillo; Staples top cat Tom Stemberg; South End bright young things Kim and John Mustin (whose father, grandfather and great-grandfather were all admirals in the Navy and have a battleship named after them); Harte-Hanks hottie Eddie Logan (who wore a bow tie emblazoned with the Democratic party logo to balance things out a bit); the very dapper David Squibb; the dashing and debonair Armando Correa; the pulchritudinous triumvirate of Tamara Belmonte, Gina Koprowski and Diane Murphy; and John Ford (no known relation to the film director of the same name).

As one would expect from such an eclectic crowd, there were some memorable comments, among them:

Ventura: "I know why Schwarzenegger became governor of California. He copies everything I do. Now if Carl Weathers becomes the governor of a state, I'm gonna start wondering about the cast of Predator..."

Ventura to Haig: "So were you [the Watergate informant] Deep Throat?"

Haig's reply: "Woodward already came out publicly and said I wasn't. I think it must've been someone in the FBI."

Haig to me: "Don't misquote me."

Me to him: "General, there's only one quote I'll ever remember you for."

Him: "Well, I was in charge... until the vice president got there."

And then there was the guy who proposed that because Fall River is in Massachusetts, Battleship Cove might make a nice place for a gay wedding.

Perhaps. But the only thing more bizarre would be if Jesse Ventura officiated and Alexander Haig were the best man.

WHITE HOT...

You might've mistaken Boston for someplace a bit glitzier if you'd witnessed the Olympics-themed all-white party that fashion deity Marc Jacobs threw at Union in the South End to celebrate the opening of his Boston store. (FYI, fashion junkies, the store is at 81 Newbury St.)

Guests interpreted the dress code freely, wearing anything from a fencing costume (Jacobs) to a linen suit (natty Phoenix scribe Matt Ashare) to tae kwon do outfits and skimpy tennis whites, while a few pantingly hot models wore little more than the towels wrapped around their waists.

Most of the attendees were Jacobs' employees, whom he flew in from all over and who helped turn Boston's hippest restaurant into a party Andy Warhol would have been proud of. While some guests danced between tables during dinner, one corner of the bar had a guy who looked like a Bruce Weber model taking Polaroids of guests posing with the hotties of their choice.

Meanwhile, still-dreamy '80s heartthrobs Simon LeBon and Nick Rhodes of Duran Duran stopped in for some delicious food and some shameless flirting, while the locals on hand included bombshell beauty mogul Gretchen Monahan of Grettacole and GrettaLuxe; nightlife jefe Javier Parra of Sophia's; fashion doyenne Julie Hatfield and her journalistic colleagues Alexandra Hall (Boston magazine), Tina Sutton (the Globe magazine) and Jill Radsken (the Herald); succulent TV news producer Michele Cotler; ubiquitous hipster Bill Emery; Vidal Sassoon executive Andrea Jean; Investors Bank and Trust party pair Michelle Locke and Joe Meahl; hunky threads-peddler Michael Gallant; bubbly junior socialite Jackie Falla; and business-to-business salesman Mike DeMarco, with whom everyone seemed to want to do a little business. (Memo to him: the Cupid thing suits you.)

Overheard over the course of the evening:

A woman squeezing a man's pecs and squealing, "Do you work out?"

A man saying to his friend, "It's OK. You don't have to stay with me. Go talk to that model who looks like he wants to have you for dessert."

And one woman whose date pointed out that she had ignored the dress code: "Well," she said, "Diamonds are white." iB

AUTUMN ARTS

After such a chilly, even fall-like, summer (where were those few scorching weeks when you're glad you have air conditioning?), you might feel doubly reluctant to turn the calendar to September. But if the shorter days bring one consolation in Boston, it's the revival of the city's cultural scene.

This season promises plenty of exciting arts activity—from the blockbuster art deco show at the MFA to the arrival of James Levine at the BSO and the opening of brand new theater spaces. To help you decide where to spend your leisure time and your entertainment budget, we've compiled a list of some of fall's most interesting offerings in theater, dance, music and the visual arts.

In this issue we also pay attention to another fall tradition: the influx of newcomers who arrive here for new jobs or school. To get rid of that lost-tourist look (or confirm your superior knowledge of the city), take our quiz on the way things used to be, or study our eight steps to becoming a Bostonian.

As a goodbye to summer, two of our wittiest writers, Jonathan Soroff and Ezra Dyer, add to the laughs with their "what I did on my summer vacation" reports.

FASHION PASSION

The fall fashion issue was amazing! Elisabeth Hasselbeck looks like a glamour queen on the cover. It was such a dramatic transformation from her Survivor days that I nearly didn't recognize her. The clothes and jewelry are exquisite and beautifully shot. You all have really outdone yourselves yet again.

FWD: URBAN LEGENDS

Re: Ezra's column on e-mail forwards (Aug. 25): I have to admit that I think about all those deleted e-myths and e-legends, lost in trashbin cyberspace, on those times when luck's evil twin befalls me (i.e., I get a flat tire and have no spare, or I'm a quarter short of getting my coffee). Bill Gates does fit the profile of someone who would share his wealth. You know someone who got a check too, right? That's amazing because I also know this friend who is a cousin of this girl who married another friend's roommate of this guy who I sat next to in art history class. Wow...

Thank you for putting in print these myths that, while we have known all along they were fake, have rendered us desensitized to anything in our in-box marked "urgent." Much gratitude for giving us the ability to find humor in the Boston-twentysomething-dysfunctional existence. And thanks for making me look like an idiot laughing to myself at a local coffee shop while reading that article on Girls Gone Wild.

FASHION FORWARD

Stel's occupies a funky basement space on Newbury Street.

Soon after Tina Burgos started working with Jon Callahan at Zegna, the high-end men's clothing boutique, they realized they shared the same aesthetic sensibilities—and both dreamed of opening their own store. A year and a half later, the pair, along with Burgos' husband, Dave Nauyokas (whom she met while working at Louis Boston), have made that dream a reality with the opening of Stel's, named after Nauyokas' fashionable grandmother, Stella.

The industrial-chic store occupies a cavernous space on Newbury Street, below Newbury Comics. Clothes hang on exposed brick walls and fill small racks that stand on the cracked cement floors. The funky (but not too funky) decor matches much of the clothing's style. Callahan describes it as "classic with an urban edge," which translates to hip but not overly trendy. "I like to compare it to an old leather jacket that gets handed down," he says. "Cool pieces with an edge that won't go out of style in a few years."

Most of Stel's clothes have a shabby-chic vintage look à la Anthropologie—only a whole lot nicer (price tags average $300). A few items actually are vintage, like Levi's jackets and belts. The stores doesn't carry full lines by any particular designer, but rather a few pieces (pants, shirts, sweaters, jackets and dresses) from an array of mostly Italian and American names. "We choose items from lines that go with pieces from other lines," Callahan says. "We don't want to be a label." The brands that are here—Petro Zillia, Twinkle, Gary Graham, FrostFrench—aren't available at many stores in the city.

Friendly and helpful, Stel's owners are aiming to break the stereotype of the unwelcoming high-end clothing boutique. Works by local artists hang on the walls, and Callahan (a painter himself) is setting up art shows, performance art events and live music shows in the store. He also hopes to sell T-shirts made by local artists.

But what really helps make Stel's welcoming is Oonagh, the store's bouncy Staffordshire bull terrier puppy, who is sprawled out on the couch on the day I visit. "The lounge area was supposed to be for customers," says Callahan, "But now it's all hers." 334 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-3348). www.stelsinc.com.

BOSE BREAKS THE SOUND BARRIER

Bose has plenty of projects in the works inside its Framingham headquarters (aka "the Mountain"), ones that have nothing to do with Wave Radios. Dr. Amar Bose, company founder and still numero uno, admits that the company's secret work on cold fusion didn't pan out (no joke), but last month Bose finally went public on another project that's been in progress since 1980: an automotive suspension system unlike anything on the road today.

While conventional suspension passively absorbs bumps, the Bose system uses an electromagnetic strut at each wheel to actively smooth them out—if all four wheels simultaneously hit bumps of different heights, each corner retracts or extends itself to keep the body of the car level without the passengers feeling much of anything. The car also stays level while braking and cornering. Bose says the setup provides a better ride than any luxury car, with handling better than any sports car. (Auto manufacturers are getting a look at the system now, but it's several years away from showing up in a production model.)

Prior to the suspension system's public debut, Bose would only comment that its secret project "has to do with cars but has nothing to do with sound." When asked what other covert work is in progress, Dr. Bose says, "We have another project that's as revolutionary as the suspension. And it has to do with cars, has nothing to do with sound...and nothing to do with suspension." We're keeping our eyes peeled for a cold fusion–powered Lexus on the Mass. Pike. —Ezra Dyer

ART SPIEGELMAN

Art Spiegelman's 1992 Pulitzer Prize–winning graphic novel, Maus, a Holocaust story about Jewish mice exterminated by Nazi cats, pushed the boundaries of the comic book form to the extreme. As the third anniversary of the September 11 tragedies approaches, Spiegelman tackles that subject with the publication of In the Shadow of No Towers. The former New Yorker staff artist and writer's first book since Maus is an account of his experience as a lower Manhattan resident on that day, and his subsequent outrage at the American government's response. Spiegelman spoke with us about his new book during the Republican National Convention, before his national book tour lands at the Harvard Book Store September 20.

IB: Are you protesting during the Republican National Convention?
AS: I went to the Republican convention yesterday. Shudder. I [protested] over the weekend. Now I'm trying to know thine enemy. I don't know any Republicans. I live in the dark blue heart of the blue zone.
IB: What's it like there now?
AS: There's neighborhoods where you could totally not know anything is happening, and then there's places where protesters are very peacefully and seriously protesting, and other places where they're getting themselves busted. And then there's Republicans blithely out on shopping sprees being protected from visuals of all of that.
IB: Is it cathartic for you to write about and illustrate tragic events?
AS: I don't feel cathartic about it especially. It's just how I process things.
IB: Will you be acknowledging the anniversary of September 11 in any particular way?
AS: Well I've done it one way or another. Usually I try to do it by sort of wandering around my neighborhood and appreciating it.
IB: You're obviously trying to reach people about September 11. If you could boil your book down to one message, what is it?
AS: I guess ultimately the ways in which September 11 was hijacked. It wasn't originally made to be a definite history of September 11. It was a zeitgeist diary of what it felt like to be in my head in lower Manhattan for that year. I think it's not about reaching people about September 11 but talking about the fragility of civilization.
IB: What do you like most about the comic book format?
AS: I think when you get to plug part of your brain into the visual component and the other through the verbal component, you have a better chance of getting something that sticks—and will also stand still long enough for you to analyze.
IB: What do you think about classic comic books being made into blockbuster movies?
AS: It's in a way the death now of a certain kind of comic book. But even the ones that aren't officially based on comics, like The Terminator, are comic book movies. And eventually it seems like America is becoming a comic book movie. I get to go watch Arnold Schwarzenegger be another kind of terminator later today at the convention.
IB: Has a movie version of Maus been proposed?
AS: Oh, over and over again.
IB: Are you considering it?
AS: No. A long time ago I was able to blow somebody off. They asked how I would want to [make the movie] and I said I didn't want to do it. And they said how would you do it if you had final cut. I said I'd use real mice. Now it seems with computers it would be possible. But it took 13 years [to write] and to find its proper shape. I don't see why I would then find a much more compromised shape.
—Jessica Iredale

A SUSHI SEQUEL

The Big O... When Tim Panagopoulos opened ultra-stylish Osushi in Copley Place in late 2002, it was the first restaurant in what he hoped would one day become a sushi chain. In late September, he'll take a step closer to his goal when the second Osushi opens, in the Financial District. The new location is twice the size of the first Osushi. Panagopolous has expanded the menu to include teryaki and noodle dishes, and he plans to increase the restaurant's take-out/delivery business. If it's anything like the original, we're pretty sure our Financial District friends are going to be loving lunch time. 101 Arch St., Boston (617-330-1777).

Cambridge Kitchen... If you're a fan of local eateries Audubon Circle, Miracle of Science and Cambridge 1, here's a little something to whet your appetite. The owners are planning a fourth sibling venture, Middlesex, slated to open later this month two doors down from Miracle of Science. Bar manager Kit Paschal tells us that the new lounge/restaurant will have DJs, live music and a lunch and dinner menu offering appetizers and paninis. 315 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-868-6739).

Pizza at Picco

Mamma Mia... At Picco, the newest restaurant to open in the South End, pizza is just the beginning of the housemade offerings. Owner Rick Katz, who was most recently pastry chef at Legal Sea Foods, created the menu: homemade soups ($3.25 a cup), salads (the warm spinach salad goes for $5.95), dessert pizzas (blueberry or chocolate) and, best of all, homemade ice cream, with specialty flavors like coconut chocolate chip and ginger. Picco also offers homemade sodas (ginger ale, passion fruit and raspberry) served on the rocks or in ice cream sodas, and wine ($5–$10 by the glass). Patio seating is available while the warm weather lasts. 513 Tremont St., Boston (617-927-0066).

Kitchen Crossover... Changes are afoot in the kitchen at two-year-old 33 Restaurant in the Back Bay. Gone is longtime chef Joshua Botsford, and with him, the French-Italian menu. In early August, new chef Anthony Dawodu (formerly of Aujourd'hui) introduced a new contemporary American menu with dishes like tuna tartare ($10) and lobster risotto ($22) that he feels will have broader appeal. 33 Stanhope St., Boston (617-572-3311). —E.H., J.I. and R.L.

PARTYING & PAMPERING

Friends, cocktails, snacks and a massage. Chance are you won't find all four at your neighborhood bar, but you will find them at G Spa's new after-work Happy Hour. This spa treatment/cocktail hour, available weekdays between 6 and 8 pm, lets you combine friends (minimum four), drinks (Champagne and/or martinis), food (fruits, veggies and cheese) and massage for a relaxing experience to de-stress from the workday. Grab a group of friends, call up the spa and snag the cushy couch and chairs. Massage therapist Joshua Lucas gives each person a mini-massage and keeps the drinks topped off. At $200 for the first four and $50 for each additional person, it won't put much stress on your wallet either. 35 Newbury St., Boston (617-267-4772). —Samantha House

Bully for Them... Boston's Bulfinch Triangle, recently named as one of the city's next targets for redevelopment, takes its first step in a new direction in late September with the opening of the Bulfinch Hotel on Merrimac Street. The hotel, right down the road from the FleetCenter, has a modest 80 rooms (each with a flat-screen TV), a 24-hour fitness center and an Angus Beef Steakhouse. And for $149 a night, it's a pleasant treat for visitors who just paid out the wazoo to watch the Bruins or Celtics. 107 Merrimac St., Boston (617-624-0202). www.bulfinchhotel.com.

Focus on the Burn... Two-time Olympian Peter Donohoe opened the city's newest chichi health club, Focus Fitness, last month on Congress Street, just across Fort Point Channel from the Financial District. Donohoe, who competed in the 1998 and 2002 Winter Games for the Irish bobsled team, says Focus "isn't meant to compete with the Fitcorps and Boston Sports Clubs of the city." You hear that, Sports Club/LA? Donohoe's facility has the degrigeur high-end equipment, like cardio machines equipped with individual flatscreen TVs and the Body Map computerized workout-design system (the only one in Boston), but Focus Fitness' hook is personal training by Olympic athletes—two of whom started work as soon as they got back from a bit of business in Athens. 303 Congress St., Boston (617-951-2900). www.focusfitnessboston.com.

Singles Screening... First dates and movies go together like beer and pretzels, which is likely why matchmakers at Lavalife.com are pairing the two for their latest singles event, Click at Flick Night. Here's the deal: Every other Wednesday, single men and women can head to Loews Boston Common and buy a $9.75 ticket that includes a complimentary cocktail hour (featuring drinks by Svedka Vodka) with icebreaker activities like spin the bottle and tarot card readings. If all goes well, you watch the film (the first one was Alien vs. Predator, but hopefully the next one will be more bearable) sharing popcorn with the man or woman of your dreams. www.lavalife.com/flick.

Club Conversions... On the local club scene, Kevin Troy has the golden touch (see Jillian's, Tequila Rain and the Blue Cat Café). So when we heard of his plans to start up two new clubs this fall, we took notice. Gypsy Bar, set to open in mid-October, takes over the Boylston Street spot currently occupied by Pravda and will, according to Troy, have a "decor unmatched in the city" with an 11-foot-by-7-foot, saltwater jellyfish tank and three private party suites. On September 24, Troy and partner Steven Foster open up Liquor Store at the former home of La Boom, at Boylston Place. More casual than Gypsy, the Store will feature nightly contests and the city's first mechanical bull. Yee haw!

HIT ME

A Vegas novice takes on Sin City.

Somehow I made it to my mid 20s without going to Las Vegas. I'd been invited several times, but I never saw the attraction. I don't love gambling. It's not on the water. It's 2,700 miles away. Celine Dion is there. But when two high-school friends, Jason and Elliot, proposed a trip last month, I finally got on board. I wanted to see why these guys keep going back, because as far as I know they're not huge Wayne Newton fans.

DAY 1

We rendezvous at our hotel, the MGM Grand, on a Saturday night. This is the biggest hotel I've seen in my life. Small planes could land on the front desk. If the lobby were a saltwater marine habitat, it would take whales months to migrate from one side to the other. And beyond the lobby lie more slot machines and tables than... than... anything I'd been programmed to comprehend. I've been to Mohegan Sun, but this is Mohegan Galaxy.

Jason, Elliot and I head to our room and await the arrival of our party's fourth member, Elliot's college buddy Leftwich, who's more high-strung than the cables of the Golden Gate Bridge. "It's good to have one crazy guy in your group," Elliot informs me.

Leftwich arrives and we march out to the Strip on our way to Tangerine. I hadn't seen the Strip on the way into the hotel, so when we walk outside, it explodes onto my retinas like a blow to the head. The word "gaudy" doesn't begin to do it justice. I expected all the casinos to be aglow with neon; what I didn't expect was that everything is aglow with neon. Even the CVS has its innocuous letters lit up with giant red chaser lights screaming around the building, as if to say, "Sure, I'm a CVS and I sell Odor Eaters and reading glasses, but we're in Vegas, bitch!"

We make it to Tangerine sometime around midnight, which is unfortunate because the club features regular burlesque shows, and the last one went on at 11:30. As consolation, many of the girls crowding the dance floor are basically naked, which makes for good people-watching (read: lecherous staring). I like to dance, but not when I'm with three dudes, so we follow a strict sit-and-drink agenda until about 3:30 am, when Leftwich bounces out onto the dance floor and disappears. We assure each other he can take care of himself and return to the MGM to gamble for a few more hours before seeking late-night food. The waitress mixes up my order with Elliot's, we eat each other's food without noticing, and finally head off to bed.

The next morning, Leftwich is still MIA. We're speculating on his whereabouts when I get a phone call from the front desk: "Do you know a Mr. Leftwich?" Moments later he stumbles into the room, raging drunk but still full of energy. It's 11:23 am. "I've been playing blackjack for the past six hours," he says hoarsely. "I couldn't remember our room number." This is a bad thing in a hotel that has more than 5,000 rooms. I expect Leftwich to pass out now and sleep it off for the rest of the day. But he's ready to hit the pool, his only nod toward hygiene coming when he grabs the bathroom disinfectant off the cleaning lady's cart and sprays a shot in each armpit.

After an hour at MGM's 6.6-acre pool complex, we leave Leftwich passed out under a palm tree and head to the sportsbook. Sports betting is Jason's specialty, and he wins me $20 on a Cardinals-Braves game. Jason has bets on everything, including $50 on Kerry to win the presidency. "I've never voted in a presidential election, but in this one I am because I want to win money," he says. In case you're wondering, Vegas has Bush as a 2-to-1 favorite.

Beginning in the sportsbook, I go on a modest winning streak: I win at video blackjack. I go up about $15 after playing at a $10 blackjack table for a half hour. Jason wins me $20 in the sportsbook. And, while looking for a sandwich shop, I come across a game called Lucky Larry's Lobster Mania. Any game represented by a cheerful gambling cartoon lobster must be lucky indeed, so I feed $6 into the machine and hit a button. Lucky Larry immediately goes nuts with the bong-bong-bong-bong-bong-bong-bong that signifies that I, a guy feeding money into a machine called Lucky Larry's Lobster Mania, am a winner. I cash out, $24 richer and now convinced of my invincibility.

After dinner at Nine Fine Irishmen at New York New York (where the fish and chips made up for the fact that earlier I'd had to call the front desk and say, "Could you connect me with Nine Fine Irishmen?"), the next evening is spent predominantly wandering around and gambling. We're down a man, as Leftwich has discovered that staying up till 11 am drinking and gambling has a downside when he's still retching at 8 pm.

Remember how I said I wasn't into gambling? Somewhere between Lucky Larry's Lobster Mania and the second night, that's changed. Suddenly, I no longer need to ask Jason if I should split eights when playing video blackjack. Instead of playing a quarter at a time and milking comp drinks, I'm hitting "max bet" and losing $20 in 30 seconds. Sometime in the wee hours, Jason and I sit down at a $25 blackjack table, something I never would've considered doing in the past, and I quickly lose $100. Then Jason convinces me to place $100 on a color at roulette. "You need to feel that sick feeling in your stomach," he says, "It'll make your article better." I put my lone $100 chip on red. The wheel spins, my eyes glued on the swirling ball, until it lands on... double-zero.

Licking my wounds, I retreat with Jason to a video poker bar, where a girl is chatting up Elliot. But Elliot's engaged and she's not hot enough to become unengaged over, so after I lose another $40, Jason and I pull a move that's normally reserved for women: We get up from our seats and start walking, saying "Nice to meet you" to the girl and beckoning Elliot to come with us. Eventually he says his goodbyes and we leave, making this possibly the first time in history that a cock-block has been executed on a girl.

I awaken hungover, overtired and financially smarting from my vicious losing streak. I drag myself out to the soda machine in the hall and deposit $1.50. I push the button for a bottle of water and get... nothing. You know you're unlucky when you lose to the soda machine.

Before 2:30 pm, I ride the New York New York roller coaster, drink a Bud Light while playing blackjack with a borrowed $20, and drink enough iced coffee to kill a chimp. One thing I forget to do is eat, and this suddenly catches up with me as we're wandering down the Strip. An appropriately apocalyptic thunderstorm drives us into the Paris casino, which in my broken condition seems like the open maw of hell itself. I'm so hungry I'm nauseated. I've slept only eight out of the last 57 hours. My losing streak is becoming a losing skid mark leading straight into the concrete wall of Gamblers Anonymous. But food will make things better, and deep within the complex, we find a crepe stand. Nobody ever says, "Boy, I could really go for a crepe right now!" but the first mouthful is heavenly. On the second mouthful, I bite a tine off my fork and hurt my mouth. "You don't look like a serial killer anymore, at least" Jason informs me. "Now you just look morbidly depressed."

That night I get my first real food of the day at Diego, a highbrow Mexican restaurant in the MGM that features a guy who comes to your table with a cart and makes guacamole. After I've stuffed my face with the best Mexican food I've ever had outside of Mexico, my trip comes to an ignominious end with a rush to the airport. Working on the naive assumption that I'd still feel human after three days in Vegas, I booked a red-eye flight home, and I have to be at work in 12 hours. But I'm ready. It's time.

A few days after I get home, the post-trip summary e-mails are flying. Elliot writes, "Ez, it's probably good you left when you did. The 40-year-old Asian man dressed up as Michael Jackson circa 1985 dealing blackjack was an amazing sight, but I don't know if it was worth the three-day hangover... The last night I really understood what insanity is, and it seems I almost crossed that fine line."

Well, Elliot is getting married next summer and I've got a roulette table that owes me money. I think I feel a bachelor party coming on... iB

THE COLLINS CARD

BELIEVE IN BELICHICK'S BLUEPRINT

Sox brass should adopt the shut-up-and-play strategy.

While the Boston Red Sox are doing what they do best—playing with our hearts—the New England Patriots are playing for a championship. As the Patriots get ready to defend their Super Bowl title, the most important elements appear to be in order—at least in order enough to focus on the only thing that really matters, the 2005 Super Bowl.

In an era of high-priced mega-egos, the Pats are as selfless as any pro sports team could be. Nobody is completely selfless in this era, but the Patriots are smart enough to understand what makes winning work. And if you suit up for Coach Belichick, winning is the priority.

Most people agree that Belichick has emerged as the top coach in the NFL, maybe in all pro sports. The Patriots are better prepared than the competition on a weekly basis. But what goes unnoticed is how Belichick handles the storms.

In the NFL, the next contract controversy is always right around the corner. Who caught the most touchdowns or made the most interceptions? Disputes are frequent, but it's how they're handled that determines whether or not the Super Bowl train gets derailed.

Belichick's strategy is simple: He ignores all fire. When the shrapnel starts flying in his general direction he doesn't duck, nor does he load up the howitzer and fire back. No chance.

The Ty Law incident was the perfect example. When Law was pleading his case publicly, Belichick was vacationing in Nantucket in search of his next piña colada. So Ty Law returned, because if he didn't he'd lose his million-dollar reporting bonus, and Belichick never said a word. Only two things make players unhappy: losing money and losing playing time. Law did what he had to do to avoid either outcome.

When offensive coordinator Charlie Weis was displeased with his pay, Belichick again kept a lid on public bickering. Instead, the bomb was defused, somehow, without an explosion in this mini-dynasty.

The only time Belichick misjudged his people was amid the turmoil following Lawyer Milloy's release five days before the start of the 2003 season. The Pats got whomped by the Buffalo Bills in the opener.

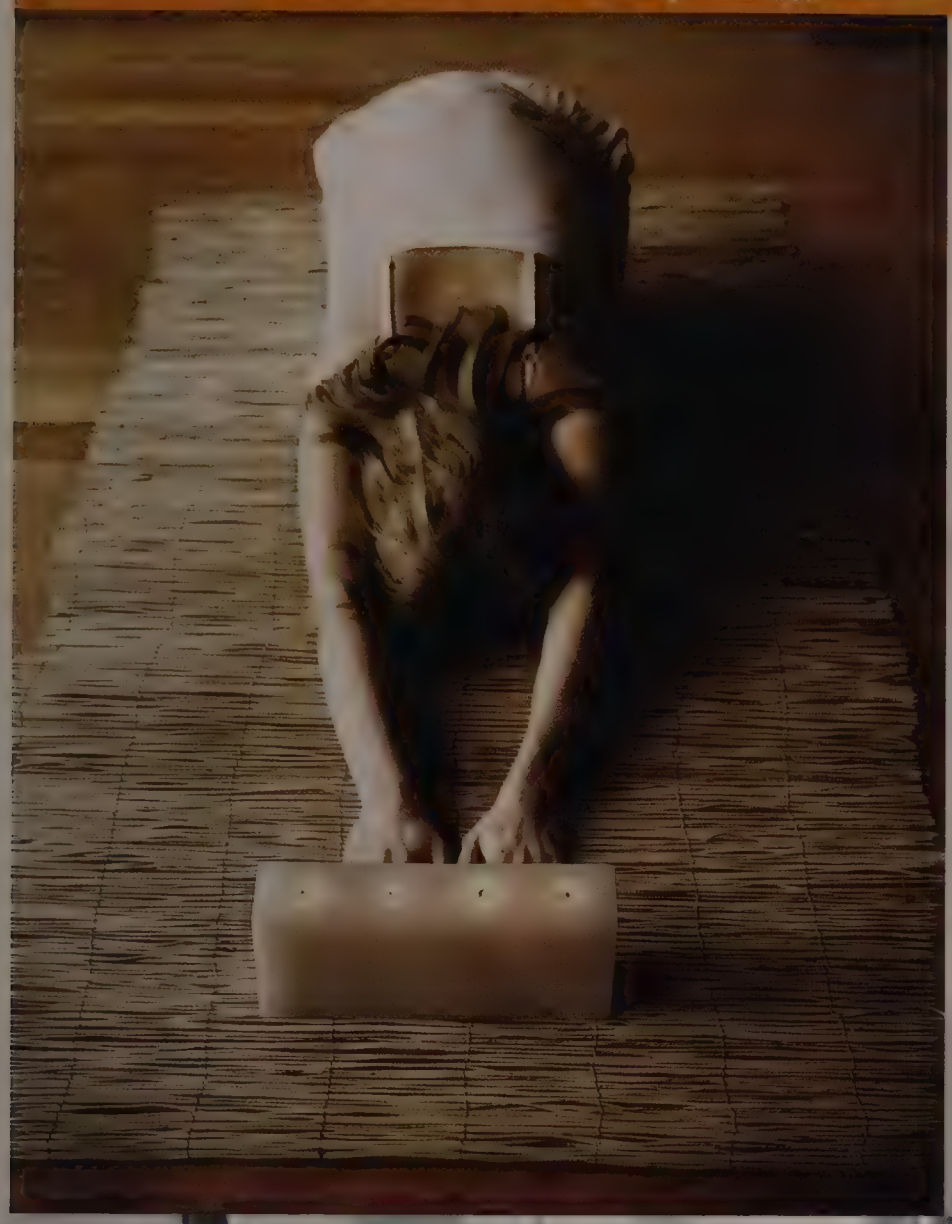
I remember talking to Belichick moments after the Pats beat the Panthers for their second Super Bowl championship in three years. His attitude wasn't, "I'm the man," as it well could have been given the team's unprecedented success. It was more like, "The guys did a great job and I'll see you next year when we try to do it again." Well, it's time to try to do it again.

So with all the answers so close by, why can't the Red Sox adopt the Belichick blueprint? If anyone could benefit from Belichick's M.O., it's Sox president Larry Lucchino. That would be a great class for Belichick to teach, one-on-one with Lucchino.

It would go like this: Lucchino would ask, "What do I do when Pedro Martinez asks for $60 million over the next four years? What do I do when they say I need to sign Jason Varitek? How do I handle Curt Schilling when he's popping off in the media about not starting the first game of the playoffs?"

"Larry," Belichick would answer, "this is how I'd handle it: Find a good book, something soothing, kick back, fill the tub up with suds, grab a glass of merlot, remind yourself how rich you are and call it a day.

WHILE LAW WAS PLEADING HIS CASE PUBLICLY, BELICHICK WAS VACATIONING IN NANTUCKET, IN SEARCH OF HIS NEXT PIÑA COLADA



Just win. And George Steinbrenner and that ridiculous curse will go away."

Maybe that's wishful thinking, but considering the change Belichick has wrought with the Patriots, who knows? I just returned from my semiannual Las Vegas trip, and Patriots fans aren't the only ones impressed with the home team. A year ago the Pats made a lot of us some easy cash by winning more than 9½ games during the regular season—it seems hard to believe now that anyone thought they'd win fewer than 10 games. This year the number is 10½. I admit, I didn't put any money down. But the wise guys in Vegas are as convinced of the Belichick way as we in New England are.

The Pats are 2-to-1 favorites to win the AFC Championship and 3-to-1 to win the Super Bowl. Yes, they're that good. No matter what happens with the Red Sox, the Pats are odds-on favorites to bring another parade back to downtown Boston. ■

Soroff ON

DENIS LEARY

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

A cerbic comedian and actor Denis Leary was born in Worcester and lived in Boston for almost 20 years. After graduating from—and briefly teaching at—Emerson College, he cut his teeth as a comedian on the local circuit and came to national prominence with his one-man shows, No Cure for Cancer and Lock 'N Load, along with frequent appearances on MTV. He has appeared in more than 25 motion pictures, including such critically acclaimed films as The Ref, Wag the Dog, A Bug's Life, The Thomas Crown Affair, Jesus's Son, Monument Ave., True Crime and the Oscar-nominated Ice Age. In addition to his hit solo shows, his production company, Apostle, has produced many of the films he's appeared in (including Ted Demme's final film, Blow), as well as Leary's award-winning ABC sitcom, The Job, and several animated series for Comedy Central. His humorous essays have appeared in New York magazine, Esquire, Playboy, GQ, the New York Post, Men's Journal, the London Times, Details, Context, Film Quarterly, Penthouse, Hockey News and the IMPROPER. In the wake of the tragic Worcester warehouse fire of 1999, he formed The Leary Firefighter's Foundation, which has supported the departments and the families of fallen firemen in Worcester, and in New York following September 11th. On Oct. 3, comedian Lenny Clarke, actor Michael J. Fox and ex-Bruins legends including Cam Neely are scheduled to join Leary at the fifth annual Celebrity Hat Trick game at the FleetCenter. The game supports research for Parkinson's disease and services for the families of cancer patients, among numerous other charities. His new series, Rescue Me, began airing on FX this summer. Leary lives with his wife and children in Connecticut.

Jonathan Soroff: OK, last night, while I was preparing for this interview, I asked a friend what she wanted to know about Denis Leary, and she said, "Who's Denis Leary?" Answer her.

Denis Leary: [Laughs.] Well, I'm not Pauly Shore.

DL: The Red Sox pitching staff.

JS: Hottest girl you never thought you'd get but did?

DL: Oh, God. That's a tough one. I'd have to say my wife.

JS: Do you do yoga?

DL: No. It's not a workout. It doesn't count. If you've got a bad back or something, and you need to do it, fine. If you're one of those people who just tends to yap, yap, yap when you're at the gym, instead of working out, I'd prefer you do yoga and stay out of our way. Last week, Lenny Clarke and I were walking through Boston Common and we saw a hobo doing yoga, which we called hoga. It's really reached a point where yoga's outta control when you have homeless people doing it on the Boston Common. Lenny told him to go f--- a fence.

JS: Ever consider anger management counseling?

DL: No. I have a great form of anger management. It's called Jameson Irish Whiskey.

JS: What does your shrink say about your act?

DL: I don't have one. Again, that's what Jameson Irish Whiskey is for.

JS: In your act, you had this famous rant about "f---in' Bucky Dent!" [Dent's homer for the Yankees cost the Red Sox the American League East title in 1978.] What would you do if you ever found yourself stuck in an elevator with him?

DL: Y'know, Bucky Dent came to Comics Come Home [the annual comedy show Leary produces to benefit the Cam Neely Foundation] a few years ago, as a surprise. The set that year was the left field wall at Fenway, and he came out, and he was actually a great guy. He even came to the after-party, and he took boatloads of shit from the ex-Red Sox and Bruins who were there, and he did it all with a smile. He said, "Look, man, I know it drives you guys nuts, but that home run made me famous."

JS: Favorite recreational activity?

DL: Hockey.

JS: At what point—after a particularly successful knock-knock joke in third grade, maybe—did you say, "I'm gonna become a comedian?"

DL: Not until after I graduated from college. Stephen Wright, who went to college with me, was doing stand-up at a talent show Lenny Clarke's brother ran at the Ding Ho restaurant in Cambridge, and Steve Wright was the shyest guy I ever knew in my life, so I thought, "If he can do it, I can do it." It was kind of a f--- you to Steve Wright. So, of course I tried it and bombed, and gave up, but I went back to it a few years later because Jimmy Tingle, who was the bartender at the Ding Ho, was doing it, and it was sort of a f--- you to him. Then I just kinda stuck with it.

JS: At what moment did you think, "OK, I'm a star." Or when did you finally feel like part of the Hollywood scene?

DL: Twofold. The first was when I did Wag the Dog with Bob De Niro and Dustin Hoffman. The director didn't really want me for the role; he had a different idea of how the guy should look physically and everything. But De Niro was producing, and he said, "I want Denis." That was the point that it went beyond insanity as far as what I thought would happen in my life. Then, right after that, Clint Eastwood called me and asked me to do a part in a movie called True Crime. At that point, I was like, "Alright, I'm done. I've worked with Clint Eastwood, De Niro and Dustin Hoffman." Who's left?

JS: Laurence Olivier?

DL: He was dead by then.

JS: You could've dug him up.

DL: If I wanted to work with a dead guy, it'd be John Wayne.

JS: Favorite cartoon of all time?

DL: The Simpsons, hands down, and the fact that Homer has never been nominated for an Emmy is a crime.

JS: Historical question: Why are there so many anvils in classic cartoons?

DL: Because they're funny.

JS: I've never actually seen one. Have you?

DL: Yeah, there's one in my barn in Connecticut because I have horses, and my Dad was a mechanic and had one at work. I've never seen one dropped on someone's head, though, and I've got a long list of people I'd like to see that happen to.

JS: Funniest person you know?

DL: Hands down, Lenny Clarke. He's funny when he's sleeping. He's funny when he's takin' a bath…

JS: Umm, Denis, what are you doing watching Lenny take a bath?

DL: Well, it's not what you think. Lenny taking a bath is more like him grabbing a vase of flowers, chucking them, pouring the water over his head and drying himself with his shirt before putting his clothes back on.

JS: Tell me a secret about Cam Neely.

DL: He was actually one of the greatest basketball players in Canadian history, and he purposefully transferred—behind his parents' back—to a different high school, so that he could play hockey. The athletic director at his school told him he wasn't gonna play hockey the next year; he was gonna play center on the basketball team. About three months into the school year, his parents figured out he was going to a school not anywhere near his own neighborhood.

JS: OK, a secret about Michael J. Fox?

DL: When it comes to sarcasm, one of the quickest, wittiest guys on the planet. People see Michael for what he also is—a really great, dedicated guy—but there's no one in any room who can come up with a sarcastic comment about what just happened faster than him.

JS: Do your kids think you're funny?

DL: My son does. My daughter thinks everything about me is embarrassing. She's shy, and she's becoming a teenager, and anything that's in the papers, any rumors, everything's embarrassing.

JS: Last question: Worst thing you ever said to a teacher?

DL: "F--- off"….and nuns don't generally take well to that kind of language. IB

DON'T MISS A MOMENT OF U35 THIS SEASON

fall arts preview

As the days grow shorter and the temperature drops, Boston's many arts venues come out of their summertime hibernation and reveal a wealth of fall enticements. The resurgence of arts offerings includes so many plays, operas, dance performances, art exhibitions and classical musical concerts that it's hard to know which ones to make time for. To help you out, we surveyed the fall lineup and created a shortlist of some of the season's most interesting shows.

Opera & CLASSICAL MUSIC

BY KEITH POWERS

beginning this fall, for the first time in more than 30 years someone other than Seiji Ozawa will hold down the single most important music job in Boston—leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The much anticipated debut of James Levine as BSO music director comes on October 22, when he takes the podium to conduct Mahler's Symphony No. 8. Make no mistake: things will be different with Levine, who's stated his commitment to unearthing the roots of contemporary composition as well as performing new commissions. This season, Boston audiences will get premieres by Michael Gandolfi, John Harbison, Yehudi Wyner, Milton Babbitt and Charles Wuorinen. As a historical complement, Levine also programs plenty of Schoenberg, Stravinsky, Messaien, Ligeti, Hindemith and Bartok. So get used to some changes.

Of course, the BSO isn't the only game in town this fall for classical music aficionados. The Bank of America Celebrity Series presents the usual mix of top-shelf classical, dance and jazz programs on its fall schedule. Highlights include singers Renée Fleming, Ben Heppner and David Daniels; pianists Maurizio Pollini, Dubravka Tomsic and Lang Lang; and ensembles like the Emerson String Quartet and Yo-Yo Ma's Silk Road Project.

Opera gets its due this fall, as well. The Boston Lyric Opera offers Rossini's L'Italiana in Algeri, directed by Leon Major. "It's not performed nearly as much as it should be," says BLO general director Janice Mancini Del Sesto. "But our audiences love it. L'Italiana has that richness of coloratura singing that people just can't get enough of."

The BLO has competition these days. Brash newcomer Opera Boston made a splashy debut last year with its weeklong Opera Unlimited festival and a solid season of unusual works, including a well-received staging of John Adams' controversial Nixon in China. This season, Opera Boston is skipping the festival. "If we did it again this year we would all die," says music director Gil Rose. But the company is staging three operas, beginning with Offenbach's La Vie Parisienne in October. "We're trying to capitalize on last year's momentum," Rose says. "We're sticking with innovative and eclectic repertory—no warhorses from us. You won't see Opera Boston doing Tosca or Cosi or Figaro anytime soon. Someone else can do them. We want to produce highly visceral, impact works."

Early-music fans also get some opera this fall, as Boston Baroque presents Handel's Julius Caesar, with the scintillating Lisa Saffer singing Cleopatra.

Gardner Chamber Ensemble: Vivaldi in the Courtyard

Is there anything as pleasant as a Sunday afternoon in the Gardner's Tapestry Room, with music for the ears, art on the walls and Boston history in the air? Yet another season of concerts at the Gardner begins September 11 with a special evening presentation of Vivaldi in the Courtyard by the Gardner Chamber Ensemble, led by flutist Paula Robison. Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, 280 The Fenway, Boston (866-468-7619). www.ticketweb.com. MBTA: E Green Line to Museum. Sept. 11. $20, members; $35, nonmembers.

Boston Symphony Orchestra: Mozart and Mahler

Daniele Gatti conducts opening-night Mozart and Mahler symphonies, but the real news this year at the famous shoebox on Mass. Ave. is the arrival of new music director James Levine. In his debut, Levine conducts Mahler's Symphony No. 8, with soprano Jane Eaglen leading a starry set of soloists. Levine's first season features 20th-century works prominently, in accordance with his stated mission to show Boston audiences the most immediate roots of contemporary music. Symphony Hall, 301 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-266-7575). www.bso.org. MBTA: E Green Line to Symphony. Sept. 30. $27–$95.

Handel and Haydn Society: Mozart's Great Mass

America's oldest performing arts organization marks its 190th year. So you think things would be a bit stale, no? Guess again. Opening night features Mozart's Mass in C Minor, but the adventurous season includes a guest appearance by jazz musicians Gary Burton (vibraphone) and Makota Ozone (piano), the 51st annual presentation of Handel's Messiah, and the composer's famous Water Music. Grant Llewellyn, in his fourth season as H&H music director, continues to build a reputation for getting results onstage. Symphony Hall, 301 Mass.Ave., Boston (617-266-7575). www.handelandhaydn.org. MBTA: E Green Line to Symphony. Oct. 15. $26–$60.

Opera Boston: Offenbach's La Vie Parisienne

Boston's other opera company opens its second season with Offenbach's ensemble piece, filled with a cast of local studs, including Aaron Engebreth, Frank Kelley and Robert Honeysucker. Opera Boston's season also includes Gluck's Alceste and Robert Ward's The Crucible. *Cutler Majestic Theatre at Emerson College, 219 Tremont St., Boston (617-451-9944). www.operaboston.com. Boston Baroque: Handel's Julius Caesar

If there's one local music event of international scope this fall, it's Boston Baroque's production of Handel's great opera Julius Caesar, with Handel specialist Lisa Saffer singing Cleopatra. Longtime Boston opera lovers will remember Saffer's early years as a student at the New England Conservatory; her reputation as a Handelian now extends way beyond the 617 area code. She's joined in this production by the likes of David Walker (Caesar) and Stephen Salters. *Jordan Hall, 290 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-484-9200). www.bostonbaroque.org. Boston Lyric Opera: Rossini's L'Italiana in Algeri

The BLO takes flight with airborne operas this year, including two major East Coast premieres: Jonathan Dove's Flight and Rachel Portman's Little Prince. But first it opens the season with Rossini's neglected L'Italiana in Algeri, conducted by Dean Williamson and directed by Leon Major. *Shubert Theatre, 265 Tremont St., Boston (617-482-9393). www.wangcenter.org. Bank of America Celebrity Series

Boston Camerata presents Johnny Johnson, Kurt Weill's allegorical opera from 1936 about a young American who goes to war to bring democracy to foreign lands. Although the Camerata specializes primarily in early music, this production should prove that the ensemble and director Joel Cohen can create the same magic with more modern works. *Sanders Theatre, 45 Quincy St., Cambridge (617-482-6661). www.celebrityseries.org. Visual ARTS

BY JESSICA IREDALE

In September, the city's visual arts scene emerges from the summer doldrums. Galleries that closed their doors for July and August reopen, and the larger museums look to entice residents back for new fall shows. The season's visual feasts range from a blockbuster show of art deco works to experimental installations at small galleries to the first-ever exhibition of contemporary Inuit art from Canada's newest territory.

Museum of Fine Arts

Perhaps the most highly anticipated art show of the season, Art Deco: 1910-1939, opened last month at the MFA. Now on the final leg of an international tour, Art Deco, organized by London's Victoria & Albert Museum, is the first major exhibition to explore the popular 20th-century movement, from its origins in Paris to its interpretations around the world. Designed for mass appeal, art deco's strong lines and sleek, streamlined details are recognizable today in the structure of the Empire State and Chrysler buildings and the set designs of old Hollywood movies. From furniture and textiles to ceramics, sculpture and jewelry, more than 240 pieces are on display. Some of the most stunning works include evening gowns by Jeanne Lanvin and Coco Chanel, a canoe-shaped daybed made of black and gold lacquered wood, and a 1935 Auburn 851 Speedster automobile. To celebrate the exhibition, the MFA's restaurant, Bravo, is hosting weekly cocktail hours (the cocktail hour is said to have originated in the 1920s) and jazz concerts, highlighting art deco's roots in the Jazz Age. Museum of Fine Arts, 465 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-267-9300). www.mfa.org. MBTA: E Green Line to Museum. Through Jan. 9, 2005. $7.

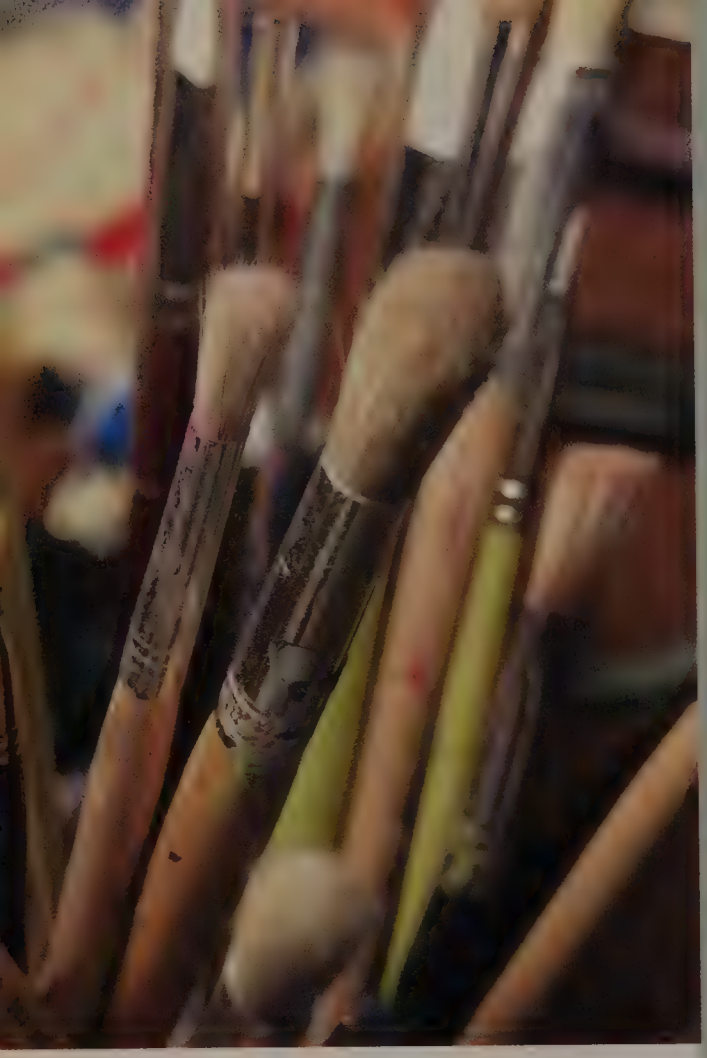
DeCordova Museum and Sculpture Park

Contemporary photography is the focus in Lincoln, where the DeCordova hosts The Architect's Brother, an exhibition by Robert ParkeHarrison that opens September 18. The Great Barrington resident and Holy Cross faculty member uses collage techniques and combines elements of theater, sculpture and painting to create a dark, lonely and surreal backdrop for his large-scale, black-and-white photographs. ParkeHarrison inserts himself into his photos as a figure attempting some great task, like patching holes in the sky, chasing storms or making rain. From the first rough sketches and research through the design and construction of props—such as fantastical machinery made of found objects—the works take ParkeHarrison roughly five weeks to complete. DeCordova Museum and Sculpture Park, 51 Sandy Pond Road, Lincoln (781-259-8355). www.decordova.org. Sept. 18, 2004–Jan. 2, 2005. Free with museum admission.

Institute of Contemporary Art

Another photography exhibition, featuring Ukrainian Boris Mikhailov in his first American retrospective, opens September 22 at the ICA. More than 500 street scenes and portraits, drawn from 25 different series, are included in the exhibition, which covers the tumultuous decline of the Soviet Union in four sections. The first highlights the color red as seen in official Soviet symbols and other everyday objects in the 1970s. The second section captures the bleak circumstances of life

NEW KID ON THE BLOCK



Camilo Alvarez shakes up the local art scene at Samson Projects.

Though museums garner most of the media attention devoted to art, some of Boston's smaller galleries have exciting plans for the 2004/05 exhibition season. Co-director Camilo Alvarez, a New York transplant, is prepping to reopen the Samson Projects gallery in a new space in the South End's SoWa building, which houses a group of galleries at 450 Harrison Ave. After cutting his teeth as curatorial assistant in European painting at New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art and working at the Exit Art gallery, he moved to Boston to found Samson Projects, which opened in March in a temporary space on Waltham Street. Alvarez is introducing an unconventional model at Samson and raising a few eyebrows in the process. Most commercial galleries have a well of artists they represent and push, but Alvarez believes that practice is on its way out, and he's not representing any artists. To inaugurate its new SoWa gallery space, Samson Projects is presenting Notorious Impropriety, a show Alvarez co-created with Franklin Sirmans. The exhibition is a multimedia installation that draws on the political and sexual scandals that occupy so much of our public dialogue, yet fail to shock anyone. We talked with Alvarez recently about the Boston arts scene.

IB: What are your favorite local museums?
CA: I love the MFA. They have a really good program, but there's always room for improvement. The ICA is also getting much better too, and I'm looking forward to its move into a different space. Boston Center for the Arts does a really great job showing local artists, and with their public programming. I think public programming is really important—showing movies, video screenings—I want to incorporate that into Samson Projects as well. With diversity of mediums, the art becomes more accessible to the viewer. You don't want to alienate the viewer, where they have to approach you and talk about the art. That's part and parcel of what art is—for people to think and educate themselves. You walk into a commercial gallery, and you're left on your own.
IB: What's in store at Samson Projects?
CA: I'm putting together a lot of public programming. For Notorious Impropriety, there will also be a fashion show. I'm collaborating with Nine Months on Newbury Street. It's a maternity store, and we're going to be screening a video with artist Amy Jenkins of her daughter nursing from her breast. It's really important to get people talking.
IB: What do you think defines the Boston arts community?
CA: Boston is incredibly sophisticated and cosmopolitan. It's a really smart crowd, and that's part of the reason I moved here. In New York, people would go to the exhibition opening and it's more of a scene to be seen. [An opening] is an opportunity to meet the artist and for the artist to show their work, but it's also an opportunity to create a dialogue, and that's something I cherish about Boston.The dialogue is very much there. People are really curious.
IB: Why did you want to launch a gallery here?
CA: I decided to open a gallery because there's a niche for what I want to do, what can be done. I was talking to a well-known artist from the Boston area the other day and she was telling me how Boston is very ripe for what I want to do, but it's also very reticent because it has a provincial attitude. That's why I want to focus on diversity. There are a lot of local artists, but they need to be involved in the international scope. It's better for everybody if you show as much as you can of what's going on outside of Boston. So hopefully I can make a ripple.
IB: What separates the Boston art scene from say, New York or the West Coast?

CA: Right now, New York is considered the mecca of the art world, and I think that's waning. It's losing its foothold, and that's good because it means the art world is getting parceled out. Slowly but surely, all over the world, there's going to be great art exhibitions in different places. Like the MIT List Visual Art Center. They probably have the best contemporary art exhibition series in Boston, or Cambridge, right now. For the commercial galleries, Barbara Krakow does a really great job, and Allston Skirt. Newbury Street and the South End. That's where it's at.
IB: Any insight into what's upcoming at the SoWa building?
CA: It's a commercial venture. Other galleries are representing their artists and they want to push them. I try to show whatever the viewer needs to see. I'll be showing hardcore conceptual art. But I'm interested in collaborating.

in the 1980s in mundane black-and-white, while the third focuses on the period after the Soviet collapse. Harvard University Art Museums

Harvard's major fall exhibition spotlights French artist Pierre Huyghe along with one of the university's buildings. Huyghe + Corbusier: Harvard Project, opening November 18 at the Carpenter Center for the Visual Arts, is a multimedia installation inspired by Huyghe's longstanding fascination with the Carpenter Center itself—architect Le Corbusier's only North American building. Two years ago, Huyghe began working with students from the Harvard Design School and the university's Department of Visual and Environmental Studies to create the three components of the exhibition: a puppet opera, a temporary architectural extension of the Carpenter Center (where the opera will be performed) and a film based on the puppet opera. Corbusier's conception and construction of the Carpenter Center is the inspiration for all three components. *Carpenter Center for the Visual Arts, 24 Quincy St., Cambridge (617-495-9400). www.artmuseums.harvard.edu. Peabody Essex Museum

PEM breaks new ground in November with Our Land: Contemporary Art from the Arctic, the first-ever exhibition of contemporary Inuit art from eastern Canada's Nunavut territory. The show features more than 50 works including sculpture, prints, video art and sound installation. Officially designated a Canadian territory in 1999, Nunavut spans more than 770,000 square miles, and many of the pieces featured in the exhibition are inspired by the region's arctic peaks and fjords. *Peabody Essex Museum, East India Square, Salem (866-745-1876). www.pem.org. Theater & DANCE

BY ROBERT NESTI

All eyes may be on the presidential election the next few months, but the shows do go on, as evidenced by a busy fall season in theater and dance. Not only are new theaters coming on line, but such personalities as actresses Elaine Stritch and Phylicia Rashad are coming to town. The dance season features new works by choreographers Peter Martins, Bill T. Jones and an appearance by the renowned Bolshoi Ballet. And for those seeking more edgy fare, there's the Out on the Edge theater festival, and, for Halloween, the Gold Dust Orphans' irreverent take on The Exorcist.

Gem of the Ocean

Recent Tony Award winner Phylicia Rashad heads a cast that includes Lisa Gay Hamilton (The Practice) and Delroy Lindo (Get Shorty) in the latest installment of August Wilson's 10-part series chronicling African-American life in the 20th century. Set in 1904, the play centers on Aunt Esther, a Methuselah-like character played by Rashad who helps a drifter find spiritual redemption. After its Huntington engagement, the play moves to Broadway where it opens in November. Huntington Theatre, 264 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-266-0800). www.huntingtontheatre.org. MBTA: Green Line to Symphony. Sept.10–Oct.17. $14–$69.

Out on the Edge Festival

The 13th annual festival celebrating the best in GLBT theater brings the return of two renegade artists who have made their mark in past: Tim Miller and the Five Lesbian Brothers. Miller weaves a fantastic tale of show-tune liberation and gay oppression in Us, his latest one-person show, which runs from October 13–17. In Oedipus at Palm Springs (October 22 and 23), the Five Lesbian Brothers take on the Greek classic and show that gay men aren't the only ones who can run wild in Palm Springs. Boston Center for the Arts, Plaza Theater, 539 Tremont St., Boston (617-933-8600). www.bcaonline.org. MBTA: Orange Line to Back Bay. Sept. 30–Oct. 24. $12–$29.

The Exorsissy

Ryan Landry and his Gold Dust Orphans have previously taken on Carrie, The Birds and Rosemary's Baby. Now they turn their satiric eye to the horror classic The Exorcist, with their characteristic twist. In Landry's version, Regan's mom is a Hillary Clinton–like presidential candidate afraid that if word gets out that her daughter's been possessed by the Devil, her standing in the polls will fall. Look for Haylee Shrimpton, the child actress so memorable in the Orphans' production of The Bad Seed, to return to the company as Regan. Machine, 1254 Boylston St., Boston (617-266-2986). MBTA: Green Line to Hynes/ICA. Oct. 1–Nov. 13 (Fridays and Saturdays). $25.

The Bolshoi Ballet and Orchestra

The acclaimed Russian troupe returns to Boston after a 15-year absence with two of its most famous full-length ballets: Raymonda (October 6 and 7) and Don Quixote (October 8–10). Raymonda is a romantic love story that features one of the most famous of all ballet duets, the Grand Pas Hongrois." Don Quixote, a comic ballet based on Cervantes' novel, features the original choreography created in 1859 by Marius Petipa, including the famous dream sequence. Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston (617-482-9393). www.wangcenter.org. MBTA: Green Line to Boylston. Oct. 6 and 7 (Raymonda); Oct. 8–10 (Don Quixote). $45–$92.

Sonia Flew

Actress/playwright Melinda Lopez's newest play examines the emotional conflicts of Cuban expatriates through the eyes of Sonia, a middle-aged woman looking back at her heritage and examining her status as a Cuban-American. Commissioned and produced by the Huntington Theatre Company, and directed by artistic director Nicholas Martin, Sonia Flew is the opening attraction of the BCA's new Virginia Wimberly Theatre. Boston Center for the Arts, Virginia Wimberly Theatre, Calderwood Pavilion, 539 Tremont St., Boston (617-933-8600). www.bcaonline.org. MBTA: Orange Line to Back Bay. Oct. 8–Nov. 7. $14–$50.

Elaine Stritch at Liberty

At age 78, theater legend Elaine Stritch is still wowing audiences. Her Tony Award–winning show chronicles her 50-year-plus show-business career and her battles with alcoholism and loneliness. En route she offers candid portraits of such personalities as Marlon Brando, Ben Gazzara, Noel Coward, Ethel Merman and Judy Garland, as well as such showstopping tunes as "The Ladies Who Lunch," "If Love Were All" and, of course, "I'm Still Here." Wilbur Theatre, 246 Tremont St., Boston (617-423-4008). www.broadwayinboston.com. MBTA: Green Line to Boylston. Oct. 19–24. $27.50-$67.50.

Balanchine Martins Balanchine

Boston Ballet opens its 41st season with a celebration of George Balanchine, one of the 20th century's most influential choreographers. The program features two of his classic short ballets, Rubies and Divertimento No. 15, and the world premiere of a new ballet by Peter Martins, Balanchine's protégé and successor at the New York City Ballet, set to a piece by Latvian composer Peteris Vasks. Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston (617-482-9393). www.bostonballet.org. MBTA: Green Line to Boylston. Oct. 21–24. $39–$98.

TASTING LIBERTY

Broadway star Elaine Stritch brings her one-woman show to Boston.

It's nearing midnight and Elaine Stritch is ready to talk.

"I always feel when I have these late-night interviews that I have some secret lover that calls me late at night, and we make elicit plans to meet," Stritch says, as her voice dissolves into a raspy laugh. "I have a great fantasy mind. To live the kind of life I do, I would have to."

Stritch has lived some kind of life. A professional performer for more than 50 years, she is one of the last surviving great stars of what's often called the golden age of Broadway. She dated Marlon Brando and Rock Hudson, understudied for Ethel Merman, inspired Noel Coward to write a Broadway show for her, and could drink Judy Garland under the table.

It was because of drinking, she points out in her Tony Award–winning, autobiographical show, Elaine Stritch...at Liberty, that she nearly missed her life entirely.

"It almost all happened without me," she explains. "I drank because I was scared, and when you're scared, you try to find an antidote. And boy, did I ever."

Sobriety came to the actress in her fifties, and with it the realization that she was far more than just a clown. When Stritch spoke at a tribute to Judy Garland a few years back, she so captivated the audience that a friend suggested she develop her life story into a show. Collaboration with critic John Lahr followed, and Elaine Stritch...at Liberty was the result. "Writing it was the most grueling work I have ever done in my life. I'm a talented actress. I'm not going argue with anybody about that. But to be responsible for every word you say up there, and every choice you make, that's another ballgame. But it's given me courage, more self-assurance, and great joy to have taken that risk."

The risk has paid off: Elaine Stritch...at Liberty sold out a four-month run at New York's Public Theater before moving to Broadway and winning Stritch the Tony Award that had long eluded her. HBO was so impressed that it hired a team of documentary filmmakers to follow Stritch around London during the show's engagement there last year. The resulting film, also titled Elaine Stritch...at Liberty, aired on the cable network this summer and has been nominated for an Emmy Award. "I would certainly love to win my Emmy, but I'm up against stiff competition," she says. As for the late Brando, Stritch says he never contacted her after their stormy relationship a half century ago. "I think he had a tragic life. He had a lot of secrets. You get fat having secrets. It's true. Say what's on your mind and you'll stay thin. Look at me."

The Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane Dance Company

This cutting-edge company, under the direction of founder and leading choreographer Bill T. Jones, returns to the Shubert to celebrate its 20th anniversary with a program titled The Phantom Project, which includes new works along with seminal pieces that were first performed by Jones and Zane. The evening also includes the Boston premiere of Reading, Mercy and the Artificial Nigger, a provocative work based on one of Flannery O'Connor's most beguiling and troubling stories. Shubert Theatre, 265 Tremont St., Boston (617-482-9393). www.wangcenter.org. MBTA: Green Line to Boylston. Oct. 22–24. $42–$60.

Playboy of the Western World

Dublin's Abbey Theatre celebrates its 100th anniversary with a six-city U.S. tour of one of its landmark plays, John Millington Synge's comedy about a mysterious stranger who wreaks havoc in a small Irish village. The play, which sparked riots at its Dublin premiere in 1907 but is viewed today as a masterwork of Irish theater, should get a definitive reading from Ireland's leading company. Presented by Broadway in Boston in association with the Huntington Theatre Company. *Wilbur Theatre, 246 Tremont St., Boston (617-423-4008). www.broadwayinboston.com. MBTA: Green Line to Boylston. The Provok'd Wife

The American Repertory Theatre kicks off its season with this little-seen Restoration-era comedy by Sir John Vanbrugh that created a scandal when it premiered some 300 years ago. How will the boorish, cross-dressing Lord Brute cope with being cuckolded when Lady Brute goes out on the town? The new production is directed by Mark Wing-Davey, best known in the UK for his portrayal of two-headed Zaphod Beeblebrox in the cult-favorite British television production of The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. Loeb Drama Center, Harvard University, 64 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-547-8300). www.amrep.org. MBTA: Red Line to Harvard. Nov. 27–Dec. 26. $36–$72. IB curtains up

With the BCA opening two new venues next month, and other developments on the way, Boston theater companies are getting a little more of what they've been yearning for: performance space.

BY ROBERT NESTI

Five years ago, when Huntington Theatre Company Managing Director Michael Maso was wooing Nicholas Martin to become the company's artistic director, Maso drove Martin to a vacant lot on Tremont Street in the South End.

"I told him I wanted to show him something," Maso recalls. "I parked the car and pointed out the empty lot and said that's where the theaters are going to be."

Cut to five years later. Maso is standing on the stage of Virginia Wimberly Theatre, one of the two new theaters that the Huntington runs next to the imposing Atelier 505 complex, at the corner of Tremont and Berkeley streets in the South End. Construction isn't quite complete; the place is littered with debris and the seats have yet to be installed. But the space, designed by Wilson Butler Architects, is impressive. A striking mix of classical and modern elements cohere in an intimate venue that seems perfect for the Huntington's mission of presenting new plays.

"It feels great," Maso acknowledges. "We've done something that people have been trying to do in Boston for such a long time. The fact that this is the first new theater to come on line, and to see it realized so beautifully, is thrilling. This is as good as it is going to get."

Boston theater professionals' biggest complaint during the past decade has been a lack of viable performance spaces. Companies worked with what was available. The Boston Center for the Arts made three small spaces available in its basement while some groups attempted to adapt church spaces, custodian closets and dance clubs into theaters. Even professional companies with more resources, such as the Huntington, which is affiliated with Boston University, and the American Repertory Theatre (ART), felt the pinch. The former made rehearsal spaces available to companies under its auspices for use as performance venues, while the latter has been mostly confined to its own Loeb Drama Center during the past two years, as the Hasty Pudding Theatre has undergone renovations.

That situation is changing though, and quickly. A number of new spaces are expected to open in Boston by the end of 2005, and of course, the resplendently refurbished Opera House, on Washington Street in the Ladder District, opened in July. This 1920s movie palace, which seats 2,600, is expected to be the centerpiece of a downtown theater revival. But the large space, owned by the media giant Clear Channel, will mostly host big Broadway shows, like its current hit The Lion King, for extended runs. Smaller companies will likely have to look elsewhere for space.

Some have already struck deals: New ton's New Repertory Theatre hopes t open the Arsenal Center for the Arts, or of two new theater spaces scheduled t open in Watertown's Arsenal Mall in ear 2005, with a production of James Lapir and Stephen Sondheim's Into the Wood And the long-orphaned Nora Theat Company plans to occupy a new theater Central Square in September 2005. (Th company will share the space with the U derground Railway Theater.) Meanwhil the ART has struck a deal with Greg Ca the impresario who ran Cambridge's Ma ket Theater for two seasons, to use a ne 300-seat space in Harvard Square that Ca is developing. Called the Theater at Ze Arrow Street, it's scheduled to open in Ja uary as a venue for a festival of plays fro South Africa that the ART is presentin In addition, a collaborative of artists fro Fort Point Channel is developing a 200-se theater at South Boston's Midway Studi that it plans to make available to emergi theater and dance companies. Origina scheduled to open this year, it has be pushed back to sometime in 2005.

But the attention this fall is on the Sta ford Calderwood Pavilion, a collaborative fort between the Huntington and the Bost Center for the Arts. Occupying three leve the 35,000 square foot space contains a 3(seat proscenium theater (the Virginia Wi berly), a 200-seat experimental venue (t Nancy and Edward Roberts Studio Theatr rehearsal rooms and offices. Now in the fi phase of construction, the theaters are open next month. The Wimberly bows first, on October 8, with Sonia Flew, a Huntington commission by local playwright and actress Melinda Lopez. Then the Roberts opens October 15 with a new production of Stephen Sondheim's Company by the SpeakEasy Stage Company.

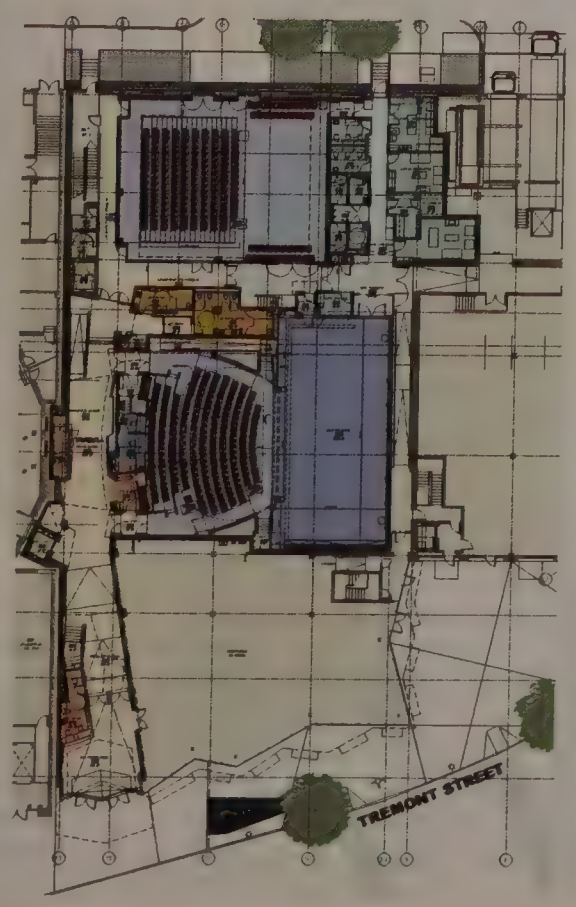
When the BCA struck a deal with the Druker Co., the high-rise's developer, to include two theaters in the building, its mission was to make more spaces available to its resident companies, such as SpeakEasy, as well as the city's newer, more youth-oriented theater groups, such as Company One. The Huntington joined in when its management saw that the project could help fulfill their wish for an alternative space for newer, edgier work. En route to development, the dynamic changed, with the Huntington taking over as fund-raiser, and subletting the space from the BCA, which is taking a more administrative role.

For the design, the Huntington invited seven firms to submit concepts and eventually chose the submission by Wilson Butler, a local firm that has done much work nationally (including many large-scale theaters for cruise ships) and smaller-scale renovation work in Boston.

"This wasn't their biggest [project]," Maso says, "but it was probably their most complicated because fitting this space in and coordinating it within the building was an enormous undertaking."

"Theaters by their nature are three-dimensional puzzles, and they are architectural machines," explains Scott Wilson, a founding partner of Wilson Butler whose 25-year career has been focused on design for the arts. "They have more level changes than an Escher drawing. And pieces of the theaters actually need to move. Set a restaurant underneath it and a condominium tower above it and the challenges are endless."

Wilson notes that while the theaters share a common goal, each needs a unique look and feel. "The Roberts is very utilitarian and functional—flexible, and free of an architectural voice," he says. "And the Wimberly is more traditional in its form, materials and its very spirit. At the same time, these unique venues live within the Machado and Silvetti–designed exterior sculptural composition." What links these divergent theater spaces is their shared lobby, where, Wilson says, "colors, materials—stone, metal, wood and sensuous red leather—and lighting combine with forms—curves, angular planes and a sculptural staircase—to create a social setting that celebrates the arts."



Once construction of the theaters was under way, the BCA and the Huntington decided to find the right administrative balance. In the end, they agreed that the Huntington would occupy the Wimberly 50 percent of the year, and the Roberts Studio 25 percent. The venues will be available for rental during unoccupied time between productions, at a cost considerably lower than the current rates for the theaters at the BCA.

"I'm sure [companies will] tell you that they'll have to stretch to pay the rent," says Maso, "but we're not charging them near the actual cost value. We know we have to subsidize the rent for them. Yes, I think it's a great deal, and I think they'll see that in a year; but they'll also say that they're stretching to do it. But just the fact that SpeakEasy keeps coming back and renting makes me think we've found the right balance."

"It is considerably more expensive," says SpeakEasy artistic director Paul Daigneault, who has booked the Roberts for four of SpeakEasy's five productions for its upcoming season, "more than twice what we're paying at the BCA. We've had to increase our ticket prices—not significantly, only by a few dollars—to help make up the difference. But this is where we want to be. It's a risk, but one that's worth it. And the Huntington includes some extras, like the lighting, that help mitigate the costs."

The final cost for the new theaters was roughly $24.5 million, about half of which was raised by the Huntington under the guidance of Maso and artistic director Martin. "I think the fact that we're a well-functioning team is the reason people are so willing to invest," Maso says. "People love the work that we're doing, and they trust that we know what we're doing.

"One of [Martin's] goals in coming here was to have the space for new plays," he continues. "But you don't get any revenue from developing new plays. Even our most conservative, straight-laced board members said we needed to do new plays. We had to find a way to do that. We were lucky. We went to our donor base and found people to make that happen."

Recently Maso booked Trumbo, an off-Broadway hit that in Boston will star Brian Dennehy as blacklisted screenwriter Dalton Trumbo. Rumor had it that Clear Channel–owned Broadway in Boston was looking to book the play in the Wilbur for a week, but the producers opted for four weeks at the smaller Wimberly instead. Do deals like this mean the Huntington is competing with Broadway in Boston for more commercial fare?

"No," says Maso. "We're not based on the same economic model, so I don't feel competitive at all. Trumbo is a show that should never be in a 1,400-seat house, but it's a case where we had to deal with a commercial producer to bring the show here. The final decision as to venue was really up to the producers. I don't think we're competing with Clear Channel. If a producer wants a 1,000-seat theater, they'll go someplace else. But at this scale, nobody is making money. Not in the way the commercial theater thinks about it."

As we finish a tour of the new BCA spaces, Maso stands by a triangular window in one of the upstairs rehearsal halls that looks down on Tremont Street.

"Look at this space," he says, pointing out the spacious room, with its sand-colored walls and royal blue ceiling. "I took Ron Druker [who developed the adjoining condominiums] through this building and he said, 'I can't believe I let you have these spaces. There should be a restaurant in here.'"

"It's not," Maso says, smiling. "This space is for the theater." iB

the longer view

Downtown visitors who make their way down Washington Street to the newly restored Opera House get an added visual treat when they see the marquee of the Paramount Theatre. Recently restored to its original art deco glory, the Paramount marquee was relit earlier this summer.

Many people assume there's a theater behind the Paramount's façade, but currently there's nothing but the interior shell of one of Boston's former movie palaces. That's likely to change in the next year, however, according to Harry Collings, executive director of the Boston Redevelopment Authority.

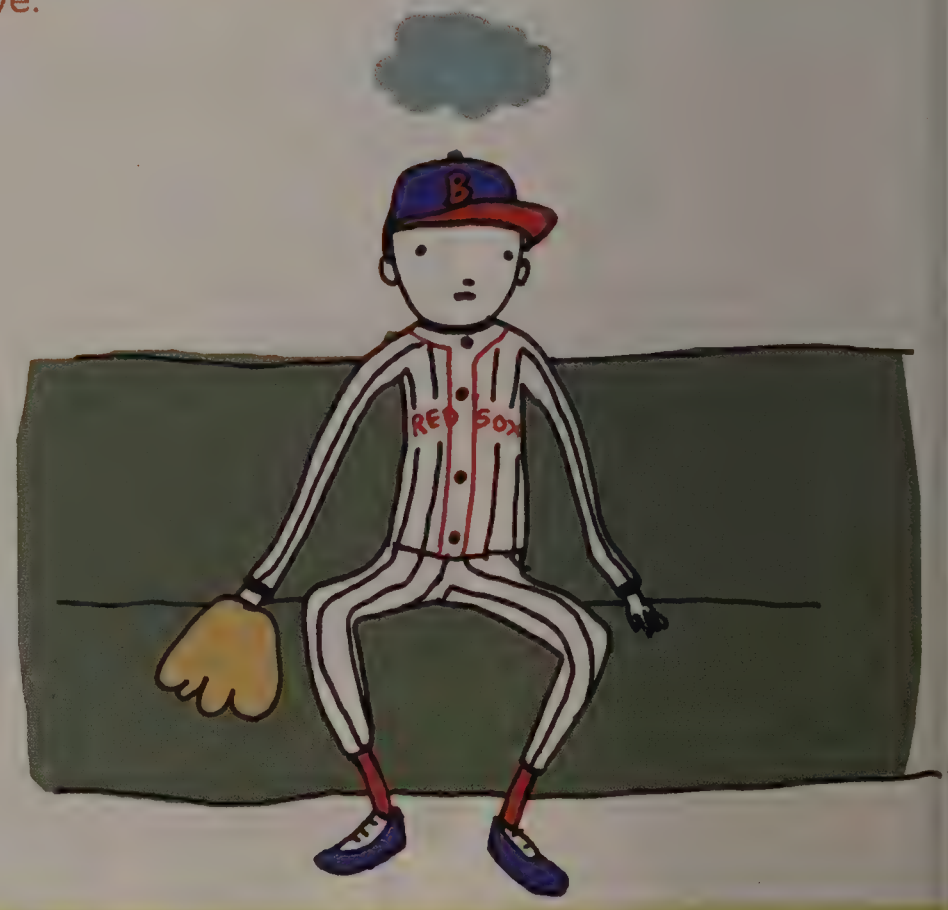
"The interior is in absolutely good shape," he says. "We're in the final phase of a feasibility study to see how it can be renovated into a theater space."

Collings says that preliminary plans by architect Graham Gund are in place to transform the Paramount into a 600-seat auditorium that could be reconfigured into a smaller, "black box" space. The cost would be close to $11 million.

"The feasibility study will be ready in 60–90 days," Collings says. "The next step is for us to figure out who will manage the project and how it will be implemented."

The Modern Theatre, also on Washington Street, is another story entirely. The good news, according to Collings, is that the building was saved from demolition and the façade was cleaned. The bad news is that interior is beyond repair for use as a theater. "There's nothing inside that's salvageable," he says. "There has been such serious water damage over the years."

Instead, hopes are that the space can be turned into a mixed-usage building, with condominiums bringing in money to defray the cost of the renovations, and the theater space transformed into a cultural center under the guidance of developer Bobby Sager. "We're working with Sager Family Foundation to develop the space," says Collings. "They'd like to see it as an incubator space for artists to share and develop ideas."



eight simple steps to becoming a bostonian

BY ANDREW GRAHAM

ILLUSTRATIONS BY ALLI ARNOLD

You've recently moved to Boston, and you desperately want to fit in—or at least not to look and sound like a tourist. You've seen Good Will Hunting 40 times, you love Aerosmith, and you drink so much Sam Adams that your liver's wicked pickled, guy! You weren't born here, but you want to be a real, authentic Bostonian more than anything. So how does a new arrival get closer to the fiercely protected heart of Boston? Well, we're here to help. Master the following steps, and you'll pass for a Kennedy compound insider or a Southie lifer in no time.

Drive like no one's watching.

Remember how Superman's planet was super-powered, and when he came to Earth he was faster and stronger than everyone else? You need to drive like Superman. Able to go from zero to 60 in a 25 mph zone! With the power to leap small imported hatchbacks in a single bound! For Boston drivers, there's no passing lane, just the driving lane. Signaling is for the weak and speed limits are for geeks. Faster than a speeding ticket! We breed our drivers like we breed our rock frontmen: leathery, long-lasting and as indestructible as Steven Tyler. If you can't bring yourself to accelerate into a yellow that just turned red, you're never going to be Boston legit, grandma.

Become accustomed to despair.

Bostonians know pain like no other. Our citizens share a unique, double-edged pain that they live with season after season. You can't be a real Bostonian without knowing this pain as well as you know the route to Fenway Park from Kenmore Square. It's the pain of having your hopes raised and crushed every year, for as long as you can remember. Every spring, hope surges to life again, and in the heart of every real Bostonian, there is an undeniable knowledge that this will be The Year. The pain that Bostonians know only too well, though, is caused by an equally powerful certainty that, in fact, this will not be The Year. We can't tell you exactly how to get to this point, but trust us: If you ever do become a genuine Bostonian, you'll know. Because it'll hurt.

Learn the lingo.

OK, so we've all heard the jokes. There's no R in the Boston alphabet. Ha, ha. Very funny. But to become a Bostonian, you'll have to develop a sophisticated "eah" for that elusive R. When your waitress asks you if you're done with your salad fox, she's not telling you that that chicken in your Caesar's salad wasn't chicken. You heard "fox." She said "forks." Got it? As a Bostonian, you must learn not only to deciphah these local incongruities, but also to use them yourself. So remember, when you want to visit one of the fine beaches north of the city, ask for directions to the Noth Shaw.

Hate NYC like it's going out of style.

This step is easy. Just learn to hate New York City. Once you've put down roots in Boston, you can start knocking New Yorkers' funny accents, rudeness behind the wheel and obsession with civic pride. Not to mention their lousy public transportation system and the fact that the place is overrun with college students—and who can even afford to live there?! You'll know you're a real Bostonian when you can say all this with a straight face, even when someone asks, "Wait, what city were you talking about?" Experts are divided on the reasons NYC inspires such antipathy in Bostonians. Some suspect a connection to the local sports franchises, specifically the baseball teams. However, since these teams are primarily made up of millionaires who are rarely, if ever, native to the towns whose teams they play for, that explanation seems unlikely. Nevertheless, the animosity exists, as proved by a recent conversation we overheard in the Hamptons. Connecticut was whispering to New York, "You know, darling, Boston says you suck." "Oh, dear, isn't that dreadful," New York replied. "Boston who??"

Develop selective amnesia.

To become a Bostonian, you'll have to be able to complain convincingly— and know whom to complain to. For example, when the thermometer drops to 59.9 in mid September, you'll want to start griping about "this fricking freezing weather." But only to neighbors and co-workers. To out-of-towners, you'll just chortle gleefully about "owwah chilly New England winters! Hope yez can stand it!" Another step to complaining like a Bostonian is commiserating with your fellow citizens about the Big Dig. "Will they ever get it done?" "My route is so screwed up now!" "Jeez, I think I spend more time on 93 than at work or at home!" But if visitors want to know how it's going, well, "it's fine." "I practically don't even notice it." "Yeah, it's kind of a hassle, but it's going to be great when they finish it!"

If you went to a local college, deny, deny, deny.

From Newbury Street hair stylists to the people who sell snug black T-shirts and heavy makeup, Bostonians appreciate the jobs created by the education industry. Not to mention all the jobs at the colleges themselves! Bostonians love everything about college kids—the extra parking spaces in the summertime, and the cheerful chatter of cell-phone users everywhere. But the fact remains: No matter how many fires they set or how many cars they turn over after a Pats victory, these kids just came here for school. True Bostonians know that unless your birthplace is within spitting distance of Boston Harbor, you're an immigrant, plain and simple. So keep that alumni sweatshirt in the back of your dresser drawer.

Recognize that the Cape is the best place in the world in summer.

Where do true Bostonians go when they want to go to get away from all the other Bostonians? Where all the other Bostonians go: the Cape. They never, ever admit that they could go to an equally nice beach in Rhode Island for less money and with less hassle. For the true Bostonian, the way to get away from the annoying crowds and traffic of the city is to go where you'll be surrounded by hordes of people who feel the same way. For advanced students: You'll know you're a real Bostonian when your "secret shortcut" involves a service road littered with stop signs and a speed limit of 30 mph, and you pass the time en route chuckling at all the suckers taking the main road.

Pick a newspaper.

Your next step involves making a choice and then sticking with it for life. In Boston, you're either a Globe reader or a Herald reader. There's no middle ground. It never depends on the headline," and it doesn't matter if "my mail box was empty." You just don't buy the Other Paper. What about the New York Times?" you ask? Hmmm. Are you really trying to become a Bostonian?

Hmmm. Well, maybe you weren't cut out to be a Bostonian after all. Cheer up, though: Spooky World will still let you in, and your money's always good here. So pull up a stool next to Norm and tell us a story about where you come from. Bostonians always love a good laugh.

THERE'S NO BETTER WAY TO SEEM LIKE AN OLD-TIME TOWNIE THAN BY REFERENCING LONG-GONE BUSINESSES AND LANDMARKS. TAKE OUR QUIZ TO TEST YOUR LOCAL KNOWLEDGE—AND LEARN HOW TO PASS AS A BOSTONIAN EVEN IF YOU JUST MOVED HERE YESTERDAY.

If someone tells you to go to the cab stand in front of where the Duck Boats used to depart, you:

A. Whistle loudly to get a cab—cab stands are for the weak.
B. Wonder what duck boots have to do with anything.
C. Put on scuba gear, go to the harbor and duck some boats.
D. Say "Oh, you mean the cab stand up the street a little bit from where Dad's Diner used to be?"

The Rattlesnake Bar and Grill used to be called:

A. The Rattlesnake Bar and Grill
B. George
C. Both of the above
D. Captain Fishbone's

You're getting a group together to go to a concert in the amphitheater in Mansfield. You propose this as a trip to:

A. The Shawmut Center
B. Great Woods
C. CMGI Field
D. Harborlights

A longtime Boston resident is recounting adventures in the Combat Zone. He asks, "You know wheah that is, right?" You reply:

A. "That's where Sully picked up that hookah who tuhned out to be an undahcovah cop back in '75."
B. "Did you mean to say 'Danger Zone,' the rockin' Kenny Loggins hit from the Top Gun soundtrack?"
C. "Kind of around Chinatown somewhere?"
D. [With a far-off, nostalgic look in your eyes] "Well, at least the Slipper's still around."

You've been invited to a BU kegger. The directions say to bear right just past the Ellis the Rim Man building. Where the hell is that?

A. You're afraid of attending any party that involves the phrase "Ellis the Rim Man."
B. That's the former automotive accessories store on Comm. Ave. that's now home to the Media and Technology Charter High School.
C. It's right before the curve in Comm. Ave. where you have a 50 percent chance of getting hit by a trolley any time you cross the street.
D. All of the above

6. There's a couch you love in an old Paine's Furniture catalog. You go to the store to buy it, but leave emptyhanded because the space is now occupied by:

A. Hoboes
B. Ellis the Rim Man
C. Davio's Restaurant
D. House of Spatulas

7. The structure at 100 Summer Street used to be called the Lollipop Building because:

A. It's where the munchkins from The Wizard of Oz once shared an apartment.
B. It was coated with a tough candy shell that was eventually eaten by birds.
C. It had a lollipop sculpture out front.
D. It was owned by burlesque dancer Lolly Pop.

8. Tower Records is now:

A. The Guinness Book of World Records
B. The Mass. Office of Public Records
C. Roc-A-Fella Records
D. Virgin Records

9. Jordan Marsh became:

A. The Back Bay, once it was filled in
B. Jordan Knight, a founding member of boy-band supergroup New Kids on the Block

D. A woman named Marsha, thanks to a team of Swedish doctors

10. What type of career was often launched at the Ding Ho?

A. Chinese mall Santa
B. Ding hostess
C. Long-shelf-life pastry creator
D. Comedian

11. The building that houses Jasper White's Summer Shack and Kings on Dalton Street used to be:

A. The Cheri movie theater
B. A nuclear bunker where Bill Buckner hid for several months after the '86 World Series
C. A warehouse for Aerosmith's Toxic Twins–era drugs
D. An ill-conceived water park that is still mired in legal trouble after the wave pool ruptured in '93, sending scores of boogie-boarders surfing into a dentistry conference taking place across the street at the Sheraton

12. This local landmark was bought out and destroyed by Mass. General Hospital to make room for an expansion in March 2002:

A. Paul Revere's house
B. The U.S.S. Constitution
C. Samuel Adams' grave
D. Buzzy's Fabulous Roast Beef

13. When Bostonians reminisce about the Garden, they're referring to:

A. The arena that preceded the FleetCenter
B. A great place to get in a fistfight with Philadelphia Flyers fans
C. The only major sporting venue in the country where 90 percent of the seating was obstructed-view
D. All of the above

14. They may have changed the sign out front, but everybody still calls the Beacon Street Irish bar/club An Tua Nua by its old name:

A. Hiya Howdoya Dua
B. Ri Ra's
C. The Leek and Badger
D. Harry O'Dingle's

15. If you found a pirate map showing treasure buried at the Auditorium T stop, you'd want to go to:

A. Your friend Chunk's house to get some help finding this treasure
B. The Suffolk Downs stop on the Blue Line, where a veritable treasure awaits if you bet on the right horse
C. The Hynes Convention Center stop on the Green Line
D. The Boylston Street stop, because you can't get enough of those old trains parked there

16. Bank of America bought Fleet Bank, which bought BankBoston, which was a merger of:

A. Bank of Boston and BayBank
B. David Boston and Tyra Banks
C. Bank of Boston and the contents of some guy's wallet they found on the ground

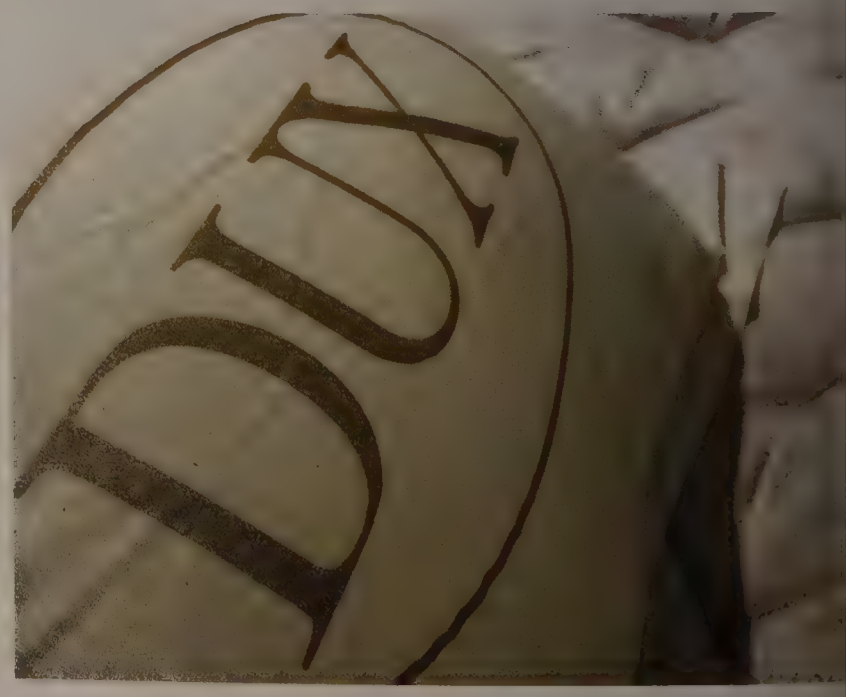
SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY

GOT TO GET OURSELVES BACK TO THE GARDEN

Richard Roberts, whose book I Was Much Happier When Everything I Owned Was in the Back Seat of My Volkswagen, saw the '60s firsthand, and would like some of it back.

I Was Much Happier When Everything I Owned Was in the Back Seat of My Volkswagen reads like a roaring, fulminating speech. Richard Roberts' itchy ire is directed at numerous present-day ills—influence peddling and surveillance of our daily lives by the government; politics; the over-medication of old and young; scummy fund-raising scams and insurance that doesn't always insure; the mall-addiction of the young; and more. Remembering the '60s, with its flower-powered, down-in-the-streets populism, spontaneity and effective action, Roberts laments the way the world has turned and wants baby-boomers—the "Biggest Generation"—to replant those flowers and provide a little sixties spirit to the currently young. "Take two nothing and call yourself in the morning," he says to Prozac addicts. Whatever is grass-roots (indeed, grass in all its meanings) appeals to this enlivening ouch-sayer. Roberts admires, and resembles, George Carlin, whose half-grouchy irony always bears common sense. Brisk in his curmudgeonliness, he balances the attacks with a list of suggestions to address each ill. Eliminate credit cards, lawyers and SUVs. Vote! And: "If you want to hear the truth, listen to blacks. Or comedians. Or even better, black comedians. Or comedian, Lewis Black."



PORTRAIT OF MY LOVE (CAT)

Photographer Gail Bryan captures images of cats and/or their owners. Call 781-383-0483. From $1,500.

As a former photographer for the Christian Science Monitor, Gail Bryan has captured images from al over the world—of people in China; vast misty landscapes in Peru, Mexico and Nepal; and the up-clos curly trunk of an elephant. Now, Bryan has circled back to another specialty—the more intimate, grace ful world of cats. Often, she captures that connection between a cat and its owner that can only b called a relationship, doing so in a rather dreamy visual style. She likes to do serial portraits, followin the cat (or other animals) as they lounge—unposed—in their easy habitat of home. A low-key "consul tation" precedes the actual shooting, and Gail's own grace and affinity sets the unstaged stage for subse quent clicking. In one menagerie-household, Bryan shot a woman nuzzling her horse and donkey, an schmoozing on a sofa with her cat and dog. Bryan also has a book in progress that cozily follows a beau tiful 13-year-old girl and her cat. This girl has typed an ongoing diary of self and cats, and Gail ha chronicled it all in black-and-white with her Leica, the cats photogenically arrayed against gauzy cu tains, the girl leaning affectionately against them in natural light.

THE HIGH END OF SNOOZING

Duxiana, at 31 St. James St. (the Park Square Building), carries Swedish Dux beds. Call 617-426-3441.

The Dux bed makes one think of psychotherapist Carl Rogers, who invented "unconditional positive regard," an approach that involves gentle, highly sensitive reflection of the patient's thoughts and words. Dux's sophisticated mattress solves the problem of soft and saggy beds—and of hard and unyielding ones. The Dux bed contains up to 3,600 springs—compared with a stingy 900 in some other queen size mattresses—arranged in layers. The lower layer of springs provides strong, resilient support; the upper, flexible layer molds to your natural curves, dispersing weight in an even way, so no one body pa is pressured into a dead end of inhibited circulation. The springs, like a swarm of gratifying yes-me take on the specific weight of each separate body part. Atop this base rests a lovely, classy and replac able pad with customized inserts that are responsive to the body's three support zones—shoulders, tor and legs—to further cushion you. Ingenious headboards are available with a pop-out piece that slants you can sit up in bed and read. Fine linens with stratospheric thread counts—300 to 1,000—add mo delicious luxury.

REVIEW

WHOLE GROTTO LOVE

This Italian eatery's modest interior belies cuisine that compares with the best in the city.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

One of the most enduring clichés is "You can't tell a book by its cover." The über-basic appearance of Grotto, Scott Herritt's small restaurant on the back side of Beacon Hill, is a case in point. The word grotto has come over to English with its Italian meaning intact, and one does get the impression of a cave when descending the steps from Bowdoin Street into this eatery. The almost decrepit masonry of its ceiling wears a coat of dark red paint, as do the exposed conduits and pipes. A few charming artifacts provide some relief from the unfinished basement ambience, among them four antique mirrors of varying shapes and sizes, a scattering of unframed paintings, and a long, high oak-top counter along one wall covered with assorted tchotchkes, including two Victorian shaded lamps.

Once the servers began to bring the food, however, my attitude was transformed. One spectacular dish after another followed unrelentingly, transforming Grotto from subterranean speakeasy to a palate pleasing palace.

Grotto's cuisine represents the best in the northern Italian tradition, with vibrant tastes that showcase the natural goodness of the raw ingredients, and an overlay of art that highlights rather than obscures those elements. An example, served early in the summer, was the beer battered softshell crab. Served with pepperonata, wilted greens and corn ($10), it rose above the plate in whimsical, twisted form, like a briny pretzel. Despite my aversion to tall food, I could not help but acknowledge that this eye-catching presentation enhanced the attraction of the dish. With an ever so light and unobtrusive breading, the crab's melt-in-the-mouth texture and fresh flavor did not disappoint. The accompanying wilted chard, sautéed onions, and sweet, pleasantly starchy corn studded with chopped chili peppers, all surrounded by a mellow sauce based on a reduction of the cooking liquid, made this a filling dish (a characteristic that distinguished all of Grotto's appetizers). Softshell crab appears like clockwork on many restaurant menus in the early summer, and Grotto's established a benchmark that will be hard to equal. An even more substantial appetizer, the Piedmont-style fondue with steak tips and mushrooms ($11), provided four generous chunks of fork-tender, rare beef tenderloin and a large portobello mushroom cut into quarters for dipping—dietary laws be damned—into a small, silver-plated fondue dish of melted fontina cheese. A candle under the fondue dish kept the cheese warm as I dispatched the dish down to the last morsel of beef, mopping up the residue with a piece of Grotto's focaccia.

Grotto offers two pastas in both appe tizer and main-portion sizes. I found th cavatelli ($10 for the ample appetizer size simply superb. These partially hollow twisted al dente noodles did justice to th delectable sauce of chanterelle an porcini mushrooms, pancetta and sausag The symphony of flavors at work— woodsy, earthy mushrooms; sweet-salty smoky bacon; and robust, fennel-spike pork and veal sausage—left me euphoric.

Moving on to the main courses, th semolina-crusted golden trout ($20) cam in a large rectangular bowl with silky-tex tured gnocchi enlivened with nuggets pancetta, and more of the same wilte greens that accompanied the softshell cra The fish itself, two generous boneless fillet boasted impeccable freshness and perfec firm texture, preserved by the lightly applie semolina breading. A mild horseradis sauce enhanced its subtle flavor. Movin from surf to turf, I was almost blown away b the quality of Grotto's beef tenderloin. I sh away from beef at Italian restaurants, bot here and in Italy, since, with the exceptio of Tuscany's biftek fiorentina, beef is not meat that Italian restaurants typically well. With its tenderloin, Grotto cou compete against Boston's priciest stea houses. Butter tender, the fillet can wrapped in a thin slice of satiny, sweet-sal prosciutto and accompanied by cheesy- and not just any cheese, but the king cheeses, Reggiano Parmesan—risotto a five al dente spears of grilled asparag perched on top of the fillet. The tall fo presentation, which worked with the so shell crab, here seemed out of place. Th entire ensemble was surrounded by a savo red wine sauce redolent of shallots. So su stantial was the hefty tenderloin, and so fi ing the garnishes (in a steakhouse, t risotto and asparagus would have fetched à la carte supplement) that a doggie bag b came obligatory.

Finally among the main courses, t roast chicken ($20) proved a worthy pe to the trout and beef. It combined a Stat style (wing bone intact) breast with a su culent thigh stuffed with mushrooms a fontina cheese. Moist, flavorful flesh e cased in crispy, golden brown skin ma the chicken a standout by itself. But t dish did not stop there. A large pancake pasted polenta proved to be everything hat this starchy garnish often is not: fla- lorful, creamy and mildly sweet, moist- ined from the cooking juices of the hicken and enriched with Marsala wine. Aore of Grotto's ubiquitous, garlicky ilted greens hit the spot.

Grotto offers some reasonably priced ines with its first-rate food, including a alf-liter carafe of decent Chianti ($15), ell structured and dry, a great accompa- iment for the range of foods sampled. oft, slightly peppery focaccia and fruity, romatic extra-virgin olive oil, brought ith the menu and replenished when nec- ssary, made it impossible to leave the ble hungry.

Desserts ($7) included a round blueberry ini-pie, its sugared crust reasonably flaky, nd its fruit balanced between sweet and rt, and a large scoop of vanilla ice cream pping it off. Better was the melting hocolate cake, and although flourless hocolate cake has become something of a cliché on dessert menus, here it seemed magical and irresistible, with a soft, warm, intensely flavored bittersweet chocolate center.

Service at Grotto was prompt, efficient and informed. Friendly waitresses, wholly in sync with the tiny kitchen, brought the courses with appropriate pacing. Grotto offers a fixed-price, three-course menu for $34, which, depending on the choices, can save between $2 and $7 off the aggregate à la carte prices. Even without that savings, however, Grotto's prices—particularly when considered together with its good, value-priced wine by carafe—are extraordinary bargains by Boston standards. The prix-qualité index alone is enough to put this restaurant on everyone's short list, but its merit goes far beyond value. Grotto's sophisticated, professionally prepared and attractively presented food measures up well on an absolute scale as well, and when fork enters mouth, all thought of the venue's downscale appearance is banished. Put Tryst on Your List

Plus...UpStairs on the Square benefit

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Olio owner Paul Turano is expanding his reach with the 100-seat Tryst in Arlington Center.

It may be a steamy sobriquet for a suburban spot, but Paul Turano, chef/owner of the forthcoming Tryst in Arlington Center, says it's straightforward, easy to remember, and appealing, much like the name of his first restaurant, Olio in Canton.

"It's sexy," he acknowledges. "I want a splash." Just 29 years old, Turano already has the skills and experience to dive in and go the distance. Formerly sous chef at Harvest, as well as executive chef at Tanglewood, Turano bought Olio from owner Paul Booras back in April of 2002 and consistently pleased a picky clientele.

"I have lots of great customers," says Turano, whose easygoing manner and lack of celebrity-chef ambition add up to a regular-guy persona. "I give them what they want."

What they want in Canton is more of a destination restaurant, and what they'll want in Arlington, Turano predicts, is a neighborhood eatery where they can choose a burger with hand-cut fries or turkey osso buco with cauliflower puree. "An everyday place with great service, reasonable prices, a great wine list," he says.

Turano still owns Olio (Peter Keating, formerly of the Patria Group, now runs the kitchen) and has hired Chris Scanlon, formerly of Pommery in Natick, as his chef de cuisine at Tryst, which, at 100 seats, is three times the size of his first restaurant.

Tryst features what Turano describes as "very seasonal, creative, American cuisine" as well as first-rate steakhouse fare. "That's what people like, a big fat pork chop," he says. Turano, who once weighed 300 pounds and lost close to a third of that by following an Atkins-type regimen, is eager to accommodate diners' requests. "I am the customer," he says. He's also jumping in with both feet, opening right away for lunch and dinner, with brunch following in a few weeks. "I'm a risk-taker, but hey, we know what we're doing," he says. "I've leveraged my soul, and this will be successful!"

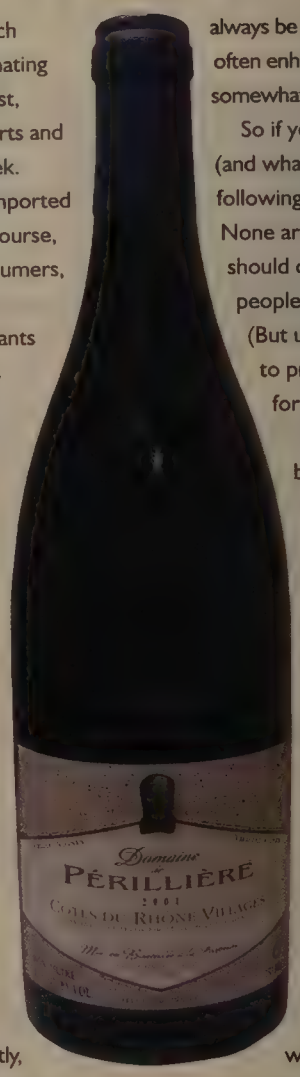
WINE

Starting a French Frenzy



BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

It wasn't that long ago that French wines were everywhere, dominating every serious restaurant wine list, every good retail shop and the hearts and palates of every hardcore wine geek. France practically had the whole imported fine wine scene to itself. Now, of course, especially for a lot of younger consumers, French wines are virtually invisible. There are many respected restaurants that carry few, if any, French wines other than Champagne. Why? No one asks for them, restaurant owners say. It's not that many of you don't like the flavors, it's something far more insidious: You're just indifferent.

Imports have grown to make up over a quarter of all wines sold in the U.S., and most of our major trading partners experienced substantial growth in 2003, to the tune of 10 percent overall, but French wines were down 8 percent. This year the slide is worse: down over 30 percent for the first three months. Again, we ask why? And the answer has little to do with politics. First, there are very few French brand names with wide credibility, but more importantly, consumers feel the wines are too hard to buy and perceive them as expensive. If you don't speak French, you need an interpreter. What's Sancerre? What's the difference between Premier and grand cru? What's the difference between all those bottles of Bordeaux? A lot of people, even pros, don't want to have to work that hard.

Trust me on this though: French wine's worth a little effort. Whereas, in general, the wines we're drinking are more monochromatic—produced to a high standard but bright, easy-drinking and almost indistinguishable from one another—French wines are often very distinctive. The reason to choose French wine is the same reason you might buy certain cheese or other food that's unique based on its origins.

In a class I recently conducted for new members of the wine-selling business, we covered the basics in six sessions, tasting about 75 wines. Each attendee picked his or her two favorites, and 15 percent of the selections were French, the same percentage of wines from France that we tasted overall. It reaffirmed my belief that if given the chance, more Americans might be drinking French wines. What do we expect from them versus the more popular categories? In general, French wines will have lower alcohol, more acidity, understated fruit flavors, more earthiness [illegible] less obvious oak characteristics. They may not always be as agreeable for cocktails, but will often enhance food that's balanced and somewhat subtle in flavor.

So if you're interested in branching out (and what wine drinker isn't?), give the following French wine categories a try. None are obscure—every good shop should carry them, and you can ask the people who work there for suggestions. (But unless you know French, ask them to pronounce the names on the labels for you too.)

If you like pinot grigio, try pinot blanc from Alsace. Yes, pinot blanc, not pinot gris, (the same grape as pinot grigio); it's milder, softer in texture, less floral and lighter in body. This is one French wine you can drink casually before dinner or at a picnic.

If you like crisp New Zealand sauvignon blanc, try riesling from Alsace. OK, so what's the deal with Alsace? No, I haven't invested there. But Alsace is, or should be, a category as tart, appley and appetizing as most unoaked, cool-climate sauvignon blanc. It's dry, racy and oh so food-compatible. Perhaps a bit less overtly fruity and with just a shade more mineral nuance than you'll find in the sauvignons.

If you like shiraz, try Côtes du Rhone. While your average Aussie shiraz in the $10–$15 range is going to be very overt with raspberry and spice, and very smooth, the comparably priced Côtes du Rhone (generally a blend of grenache, syrah and other supporting players) will have these same elements—maybe a little more pepper—but will have a bit of a harder bite. Great with casseroles and stews.

If you like pinot noir, try cru Beaujolais. No, not the nouveau stuff, but one of the traditionally made wines from one of the 10 classified villages, especially Moulin-à-Vent, Morgon or Brouilly. You'll taste the same fruitiness, the same cherry-like flavor, but again with more of a rough edge. These are very satisfying wines with pâtés and duck, turkey or chicken, the more herbs on the bird the better.

If you like unoaked California or Australian chardonnay, try St. Veran or a chablis. Go for the St. Veran if you'd prefer the milder charms of chardonnay, and the chablis if you like a bit more acidic cut that will make your mouth water. Both are classic with raw shellfish.

One of only 18 Americans certified as a master of wine, Sandy Block is assistant vice president of wine for Horizon Beverage.

CityScope: Fine Dining, Fine Art

Art galleries were on to something when they started enhancing show openings with canapés and glasses of bubbly. On the horizon are several art events that are taking it to the next level with interactive art shows that combine food, wine and art. First, there's the new artist series at Grotto. The Beacon Hill Italian eatery has teamed up with Cambridge's Out of the Blue Gallery to host monthly wine dinners spotlighting a local artist. At each dinner, the featured artist speaks about his or her work over a glass of wine, followed by a three-course dinner (all for $34). And the art remains on display until the next month's dinner. The series started last month with Average Joe contestant Tony Calandra's first art show. His work is on display (and for sale) through September 20. The next art dinner brings in Dan Robertson, who won the blue ribbon in the recent Beacon Hill Art Walk. On September 14, McCormick & Schmick's hosts another kind of interactive art show. The Floating Gallery is a project by local artists who bring art to venues as varied as historical homes, condos, chapels and restaurants, displaying the work for only a few hours. The intent is to reach viewers who wouldn't usually go to see artwork in a gallery. The McCormick & Schmick's event is a benefit supporting the North Shore Association for Retarded Citizens' art therapy projects and features work by the ARC members. McCormick & Schmick's, 34 Columbus Ave., Boston (617-482-3999), Sept. 14, 6:30–9:30 pm; Grotto, 37 Bowdoin St., Boston (617-227-3434), Sept. 21, 7 pm.

Tastings: Philanthropic Foodies

Tamyra Gray

For the past 21 years, the Taste of Boston has consistently delivered big names, music and, of course, tons of food to City Hall Plaza. If you attended last year, you saw Jessica Simpson, at the beginning of her Newlyweds glory, belt a few tunes out for the crowd. At this year's Taste event, September 18 and 19, you can hear American Idol's Tamyra Gray, or get some pointers in the kitchen from Boston chefs including Gordon Hamersley of Hamersley's Bistro, Pino Maffeo of L, Marc Orfaly of Pigalle, Peter Davis of Henrietta's Table, Mark Allen of Le Soir, Gabriel Frasca of Spire and others, who reveal trade secrets under the WRKO Celebrity Chef tent. Beer drinkers and sports fans can sip suds and watch the Red Sox and Pats games at the Bass Ale Party and WEEI Ultimate Tailgate. And if you need a little more machismo, check out the WAAF Mantown tent, complete with big-screen TVs, recliners and girls from the 2005 Miss Mantown Calendar. While the entertainment's impressive, the prices are more so: Admission to Taste of Boston is free, and you can nosh on any of the gourmet goods for $1 a taste. A portion of the proceeds benefits the Greater Boston Food Bank and Community Servings. Sept. 18, 11 am–6 pm; Sept. 19, 12–6 pm. Free. Boston City Hall Plaza (617-779-5800). www.tasteofboston.com.

Performing Arts: The Sound of Silence

Masterful mime Marcel Marceau has been touring the world with his show for nearly 50 years, and he's always created the sort of buzz that isn't associated with any other mime act. This month, the famous French pantomimist (who's now in his eighties, though you'd never know it with all that white makeup) and his silent cohorts come to the ART in Cambridge for a run of his latest show, Les Contes Fantastiques ("Fantastic Fables"). The program features three "mimodramas" based on old fables from around the world. The first, "The Wandering Monk," is a tale from Japan's Edo period about a ghost haunting an empty small town. Another skit, "The Masquerade Ball," is based on a romantic 19th-century Italian story. The last act, "Tiger," is inspired by a Chinese fable. American Repertory Theatre, 64 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-547-8300). $45, $35 seniors and $12 students.

FRI. & SUN./SEPT. 10 & 12

CityScope and Music: Fins to the Fenway

The mayor of Margaritaville is about to roll into town and with him comes an onslaught of Parrothead-friendly parties. As his leagues of fans know, Jimmy Buffett is playing two sold out shows with the Coral Reefer Band in front of the Green Monster at Fenway Park September 10 and 12. While tailgating around Fenway just doesn't happen (due to the lack of a central parking lot), the Unofficial Jimmy Buffett Tailgate Party at WaterWorks, Quincy's version of Margaritaville, offers a fair approximation. Buffett fans can dress up in their favorite tropical outfit and indulge in $1 drink specials and all-you-can-eat-BBQ before each concert. There's also round-trip bus transportation to and from Fenway. *WaterWorks at Marina Bay, 333 Victory Road, Quincy (617-689-0600). www.waterworks-boston.com. From 6–9 pm, man's best friends (and their owners) are invited to park it on the patio. Dogs can strut their stuff in a pooch fashion show or join their master in the pet look-alike contest—o just rest their dawgs and enjoy the spectacle. Meanwhile, Fidelity Investments' 15th an nual Jumper Classic, kicking off September 8, celebrates four-legged friends of another kind. In addition to watching equines strut their stuff in the show ring, spectators can enjoy pony rides, skydiving shows, drill team demos and musical entertainment by Bos Pops talent search winner Tracy Silva. The Classic's $50,000 grand prix, the only one the Boston area, closes the show September 12. If you want to watch it all in style, por up $135 per person (or $1,300 for a table for 10) for ringside seats, a four-course Champagne lunch and an open bar. *Fidelity Jumper Classic, South Hamilton (978-283-7708); www.jumperclassic.com, Sept. 8–12. Phylicia Rashad is center stage in Gem of the Ocean

Life after Cosby hasn't been so bad for Phylicia Rashad. The actress, best known as TV's effervescent mom-with-it-all, Claire Huxtable, has found herself a bit of a Broadway darling, with starring roles in a series of successful plays and a Tony award (the first for an African-American actress in a leading role) for her portrayal of Lena "Mama" Younger in A Raisin in the Sun. Rashad's latest project, Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright August Wilson's Gem of the Ocean, brings her to Boston for a pre-Broadway run at the Huntington Theatre from Sept. 10–Oct. 17.

The latest in Wilson's cycle of 10 plays, Gem explores the black experience in 20th-century America, the early days of post-emancipation. Rashad stars as Aunt Ester, a 285-year-old soothsayer and healer who is called upon to lead a young man on a spiritual journey to the City of Bones, the gravesite of thousands of slaves.

Joining Rashad onstage is an all-star cast that includes Lisa Gay Hamilton formerly of The Practice, Olivier Award winner Anthony Chisholm and Tony Award winner Ruben Santiago Hudson.

Phylicia Rashad stars in Huntington Theatre's production of Gem of the Ocean.

"Audiences are going to be moved, entertained, amused, and have something really interesting to think about when they leave the theater," says Huntington Theatre spokesperson John Michael Kennedy.

Tarnished Tale

A political thriller plot can't polish Silver City.

BY PAUL SHERMAN

The pump has certainly been primed for Silver City. Such recent films as Control Room, Fahrenheit 9/11 and The Hunting of the President have effectively railed at neoconservatives' political tactics and the media's reluctance to challenge the "official story" supplied by the current administration. Now, in the wake of these well-received documentaries, Silver City taps the same sort of moral outrage in a fictional setting, and if anyone should be able to do that well, it's veteran writer-director John Sayles (Lone Star, Sunshine State).

But Sayles does a poor job of grafting real outrage onto fictional characters. Part political satire and part thriller, Silver City is unsatisfying on both levels, but it usually falls short because the cheesy satire gets in the way of the more interesting thriller.

That satire casts Chris Cooper as Dubya-like Dickie Pilager (that's right, pronounced "pillager"), dim-witted scion of the Pilager political family. His father (Michael Murphy) is a senator from Colorado, and dad and his ruthless billionaire-industrialist backer (Kris Kristofferson) have handpicked Dickie to run for governor of the state. But when the candidate snags a "John Doe" corpse while he's pretending to fish during an "I care about the environment" campaign-commercial shoot, Dickie's handler (Richard Dreyfuss) freaks. He hires a detective agency to find out who the "John Doe" was and how he got there, to make sure no one is trying to sabotage the campaign and, when that is done, to keep everything quiet.

The agency assigns Danny O'Brien (Danny Huston), a former reporter with a mischievous streak and a sad-sack demeanor, to the case. Danny, a lapsed idealist who strove to expose political corruption while a reporter, hates the Pilagers, though he starts the job with the intention of merely doing as he's told. But when it turns out the dead man's demise has a lot to do with the political policies the Pilagers have pushed to help their billionaire buddy's mining business operate without regulation, Danny starts going where he's not wanted.

And he plays out a thriller plot that, essentially, retreads Chinatown in its tale of western political corruption for economic gain from natural resources. Danny doesn't get his nose sliced open like Jack Nicholson's J.J. Gittes in Chinatown, but ending up in the drink in one crucial scene, à la Gittes, and having a tumble with a tall, blonde relative (Daryl Hannah) of the "bad guy" is enough of a redux for me.

This is the best part of Silver City, though, and it's because of Huston. The son of late director John Huston (who, of course was the bad guy in Chinatown), he's played mainly smaller roles, and he acts with a total lack of ego that's refreshing, especially in a traditionally "heroic" role like a private eye. Although the mystery in Silver City might not always be riveting, the character doing the investigating is always involving—for his rekindled idealism, for his uneasy meetings with reporter and ex-girlfriend Nora (Maria Bello), for the fact that his latest girlfriend just left him and took the couch and microwave with her.

If private eye Danny had been given the whole movie to roam, Silver City would have been better. Watching Danny do his work is more interesting than watching Cooper do a mildly amusing, but ultimately dead-end take on George W. Bush. Dickie is, predictably, stuck for coherent words without a script and free of much conviction or conscience, and the comedy is about on the level of Matt Stone and Trey Parker's limp White House sit-com, That's My Bush! Its obvious, it's lazy, we've seen it before, and, as Fahrenheit 9/11 showed, the real thing is more freakishly amusing.

Sayles' look at the political machinery is also less meaty than you might expect. The "machinery" consists of the handler and one assistant, while the casting of Murphy, who played the title character in Robert Altman's unprecedented political drama Tanner '88, suggests Sayles is trying to tap into the "story behind the story" as that cable series did. But there's no political insight here; the same goes for the media action involving Nora, who's futilely covering the gubernatorial campaign. (Interestingly enough, we never see Dickie's opponent for governor.)

The weakness of the overtly political material in Silver City is not all that surprising. In such movies as Return of the Secaucus 7 and Brother from Another Planet, Sayles has always been better at small-p politics than the official kind. All the memorable moments in his latest have to do with more human things than government, whether it's Danny's attempts to reunite with Nora or his alliance with a Mexican-American chef (Sal Lopez) who ends up helping him out. This action has it all over the political storyline, in which characters sometimes talk in slogans and which sends the movie out in a very heavyhanded image. iB

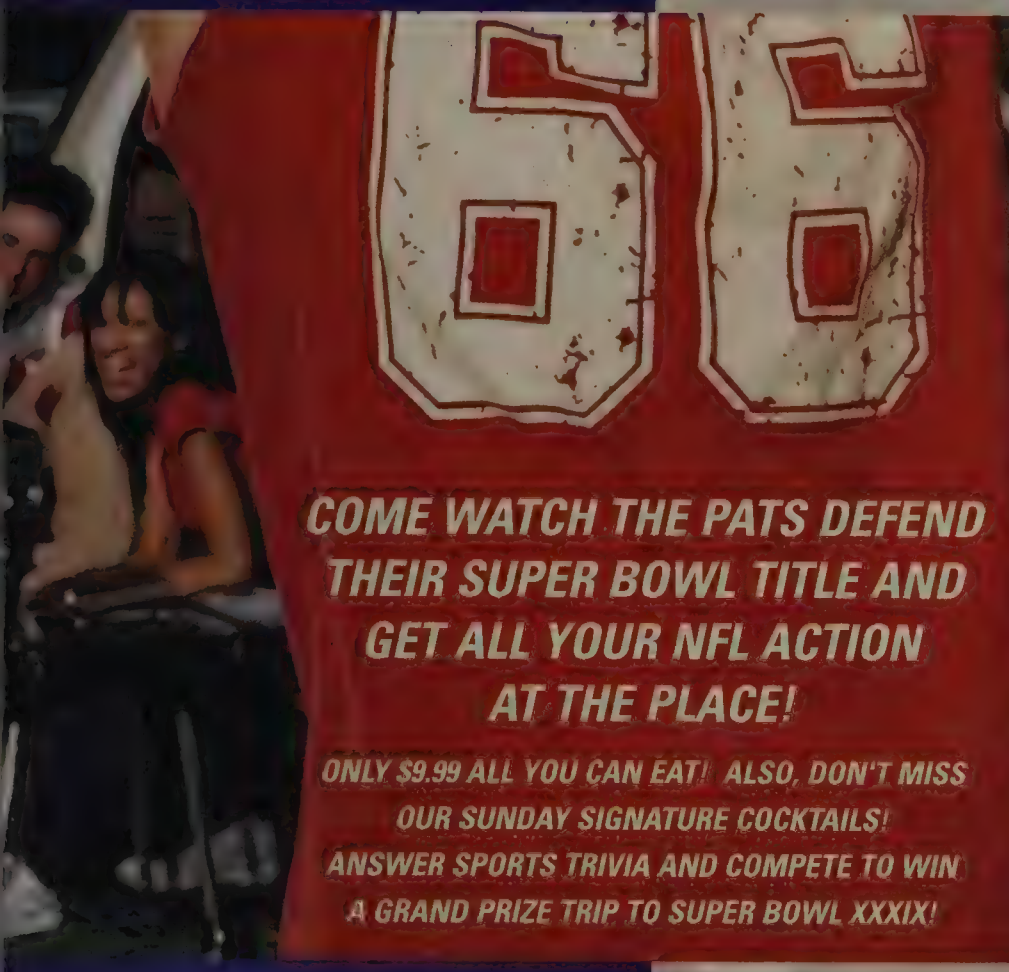
Before Sunset ★★★
They'll always have Vienna. Nearly a decade aft Ethan Hawke's and Julie Delpy's characters m there and had a one-day fling in Before Sunris Richard Linklater's sequel brings them togeth again, older and perhaps wiser, in Paris. He's now married author who's written a novel based on th fling, while she's had rather poor luck with me The spark is still there when they reunite, and th big question this time is whether the America abroad and the Frenchwoman will act on it. Unt that fateful question must be answered, they engag in the same sort of intriguing conversations they ha in the first film, so this is interesting to sit thoug But there's also a great deal of stylistic rehash, ar the second time around is definitely not as mem rable. (At Copley Place and suburbs.)

The Bourne Supremacy ★★★
Like the original Bourne Identity, the sequel is smart popcorn movie with taut action, gray y oddly exotic Eurolocations and a distaste for th usual showiness of the Hollywood action-thrill Matt Damon's Jason Bourne is still trying to figu out who he is, and exactly what functions he pe formed for the CIA, who suddenly wanted him ve dead the first time around. When another attempt made on his life, he suspects the agency is targeti him again, so he goes on the offensive against Cl investigator Joan Allen and higher-up Brian Co There's a bit of typecasting in the movie's villai and I was expecting more character developme this time, but Damon pulls off the role of unlike hero again. Action with a conscience—what a co cept. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Collateral ★★★
Michael Mann knows how to make good, styli thrillers, and the director of Thief and Manhun (and creator of TV's Miami Vice and Crime Stor shows it again in his latest. It's the story of a Los A geles cab driver (Jamie Foxx) whose fare (T Cruise) turns out to be a ruthless hit man who for the cabbie to shuttle him to a series of murder signments. Foxx is the real star here, and his liv performance provides the movie's moral center, though—like Vin Diesel—Cruise proves to be m convincing as an insensitive creep than he has b as a hero. The second half's action sequences can overblown, particularly a dustup in a Korean-Am ican nightclub, but by then the plot has enou going on to keep you hooked. (At Boston Comm Fenway and suburbs.)



Danny Deckchair ★★★
Importing this Hollywood-style romantic com from Australia is a bit like shipping the coal to N castle. But this tale of a Sydney construction wor (Rhys Ifans) upgrading his life is a charmer. backyard prank—lashing helium balloons to a be chair to float over his neighborhood—works well, and he lands in a country town miles aw There, he meets a lonely woman (Miranda O and gets treated with more respect than he rece back home. There's predictable stuff about his pr (and his disappearance) making him a media i and his new love interest finding out about his cret," but Ifans and Otto (who appeared toget previously in Human Nature) make an amusing c ple, and this one earns plenty of smiles. (At Co Place.)

Donnie Darko: The Director's Cut ★★½
If it ain't broke, don't fix it. Writer-director Rich Kelly's brilliant Donnie Darko returns—not in version that struck an emotional chord in many, spite being barely marketed, in 2001, but in Do Darko: The Director's Cut, a new version runnin minutes longer. Except this isn't a true "direc cut"; this 133-minute version never existed be now. If you haven't seen Donnie Darko, the orig version is a better introduction; if you have, yo probably seen the added stuff already. Most of "restored" footage comes from deleted scenes on Donnie Darko DVD. Meanwhile, Kelly has also g back and changed some of the songs to what he inally wanted but couldn't afford in the budget. wait a minute. Kelly originally wanted U2's "M at the climax, not Michael Andrews and Gary J unforgettably haunting version of Tears for F "Mad World," which became a surprise hit. So didn't he replace that too? Kelly should hav mained satisfied with the other happy acciden his movie, too. (Midnight shows at the Cool Corner.)

Fahrenheit 9/11 ★★★½
Rabble-rouser Michael Moore's passionate de struction of the second Bush administration h knockout revelations about its controversial policies, so don't expect smoking guns. Its ultimate target is the war in Iraq, but the movie presents the war as just the latest in a pattern of self-serving, law-skirting behavior. Moore comes up with inspired ways of getting his points across about much-debated Bush policies and conflicts of interest. He's onscreen less than he was in Roger & Me, The Big One and Bowling for Columbine, yet he argues his points better than in Columbine. Moore hits his targets because, despite his political aims, he makes you feel like you're watching a movie, not a political rant, and his sense of humor really shines through. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Garden State ★★½
The first film by actor-director Zach Braff (TV's Scrubs) has its moments of daffy humor, as Braff plays a struggling L.A. actor who returns to his New Jersey hometown for the first time in nine years. The movie recaptures the mixed emotions of such a visit, especially of seeing old high school friends, but it treads on very familiar territory. It feels like it wants to be a version of The Graduate directed by Wes Anderson (Rushmore), and it struggles to find any voice of its own. Plus, the story of a guy returning to his hometown who develops a quick bond with a Natalie Portman character has already been done, in 1996's Beautiful Girls. Braff and Portman have a pleasing chemistry, and Braff is to be commended for trying to make something quirky and personal. But it's hard not to feel this movie is redundant. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Open Water ★★★
No stars, no special effects—no problem. Writer-director Chris Kentis builds old-fashioned tension in his tale of a stressed-out L.A. couple who take a vacation in the tropics and go on a scuba tour, only to be left behind in shark-infested waters by the tour boat. Yikes. The shooting style and the actors (Daniel Travis and Blanchard Ryan play the couple) are raw enough that the movie almost feels like a home video (it was shot on digital video). And when the trip turns into a life-threatening ordeal and shark fins start slicing through the nearby waters, the action has a frightening intimacy. A much needed boost of low-tech moviemaking at the multiplex. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Suspect Zero ★½
Has Hollywood decreed that Aaron Eckhart—who's made solid supporting contributions to good movies like Erin Brockovich and The Pledge—will only be allowed to star in sucky movies like The Core and this dull Seven wannabe? This is one of those killer-sending-messages-to-the-detective thrillers that can't manage an interesting hero or villain, so all that's left is just the gore. The murderer playing cat-and-mouse with Eckhart's FBI agent is a one-time FBI-employed psychic who should be interesting, but Ben Kingsley plays him too hard and lets little humanity seep through. It's the date movie of the year—if you're in the Manson family. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

We Don't Live Here Anymore ★★
But then again, who'd want to live where this cold drama takes place? This story of the indiscretion-filled love lives of best-friend professors (Mark Ruffalo and Peter Krause) and their wives (Laura Dern and Naomi Watts) is one big neurotic twitch given a stuffy air by its academic setting and director John Curran's use of classical music. The story examines what happens when one of the pals has an affair with the other's wife, but it never really gets inside the heads of its characters, and Ruffalo and Watts are given little chance to exude much sexual chemistry together. Bob & Carol & Ted & Alice it ain't. (At Copley Place and Embassy Waltham.)

Zhou Yu's Train ★½
It's been far too long since soulful Chinese beauty Gong Li (Raise the Red Lantern) has graced local screens. But her talent can't overcome the unconvincing, overwrought romantic drama in director Zhou Sun's tale of ceramics painter Zhou Yu's relationship with a self-conscious poet (Tony Leung Ka Fai). His poetry is the thing that makes her fall for him, but, as is almost always the case, poetry just seems silly in a movie. The ineffective, nonchronological storytelling doesn't help. Nor does the movie's overuse of the train Zhou Yu rides as a symbolic tool. The movie even uses the old cliché of a surging train during a sex scene—ouch. (At Kendall Square.)

Blanchard Ryan and Daniel Travis are not alone in the low-budget thriller Open Water.

Soul of a Band

Ollabelle finds its voice in the spirit of tradition.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

It's quite a step to move from a weekly gospel jam session at an East Village bar to four months of full-bore touring with the likes of Alison Krauss and Diana Krall, especially for a band that reinterprets standards from the Folkways catalog.

But that's the fortune of the roots-music sextet Ollabelle, whose blend of originals and rearranged traditional tunes prompted O Brother, Where Art Thou? producer T Bone Burnett to sign the group to his DMZ/Columbia imprint.

"It's really wild to be doing these songs in the way that this thing started, in that we weren't a band at all and never really intended to be a band," says singer Amy Helm, whose group plays the Iron Horse in Northampton September 10, the Narrows Center in Fall River on the 11th and the Boston Folk Festival at U-Mass/Boston on the 18th.

Keyboardist-singer Glenn Patscha adds, "It's an egalitarian kind of ensemble, and a lot of that is just because, at the end of the day, we all genuinely love each other, and it's cool to play music with people who you really care for."

Woodstock native Helm, who sang in a blues band with her father Levon (from the Band), met the Canadian-born, jazz-trained pianist Patscha in New Orleans. And when New York bartender Roger Davis started "Sunday School for Sinners," an open-mike gospel music night at the now closed Manhattan bar 9C, Helm and Patscha found kindred spirits in bassist Byron Isaacs, drummer Tony Leone (both versed in jazz and R&B), guitarist Jimi Zhivago and Australian singer-songwriter Fiona McBain.

Members of the group, named after Appalachian banjo player Ola Belle Reed, switch instruments and share lead vocal duties.

"We just did what we were in the mood for, and we still do that," Helm says. "We'll just pick some tune that strikes everybody and kind of fool around with it."

"It was completely effortless and continues to be," she says. "In some ways, being part of an ensemble gives you more room to explore your individual voice, whether it's singing or something that you want to write. You have to be more open to deconstructing what your first intention is."

On the group's eponymous debut, that openness is demonstrated in a shift from the a cappella gospel clap-along "Before This Time" to the bluesy Helm vehicle "Soul of a Man," or McBain's gentle acoustic take on the Carter Family gem "The Storms Are on the Ocean" going back-to-back with a tangled, atmospheric treatment of "John the Revelator." Patscha's pump organ and Wurlitzer quietly ripple under sweet harmonies with McBain and Helm on "All Is Well," while Zhivago's slide guitar and harmonica spice up Patscha's funky "Get Back Temptation."

"The idea was just to document and record what we were doing on these Sunday nights, and it didn't go much further than that," Helm says of the band's eponymous CD. The disc's producer, Steve Rosenthal, sent a copy to Burnett. "None of us even believed it when we first found out that T Bone was interested and wanted to sign the band."

"When we recorded that album, we had only been playing about six months of those Sunday nights, so I think a lot more original songs will be coming out of the band," she says. "We're so much at the beginning of a sound as a band that it's wide open as to where it could go sonically. I'm sure we'll continue to do traditional songs, because a lot of us just naturally like that stuff anyway. It's almost the same thing if you're into blues and jazz. You just learn the great old songs and make them your own."

"Things are always evolving," says Patscha, who wrote two songs on Ollabelle and expects an even selection of originals and traditional songs on the group's next CD. "If somebody loves a tune or wants to sing it, they bring it in, or someone will suggest it for them. If it resonates, we do it. Usually there's this point where an arrangement or song just breaks, and it's such an amazing moment."

"Everybody feels that," Helm says. "My dad once told me the Band would take a song and swap it around and let everybody sing it to see where it fits, and I always liked that idea. So we've tried to emulate that a little, and we've taken a few songs and switched singers."

"Some people write songs with someone's voice in mind, like Glenn is working on a song that he was hearing Fiona sing," she adds. "Everybody has a clear sense of everybody else's singing voice and so admires everybody's singing that it happens naturally."

"We just have good chemistry," Helm says. "It really is all about the music." iB

The Force Is with Them

Underground turntable stars bring cutting-edge hip-hop fusion to the Middle East.

RJD2 is impressing audiences with his new disc, Since We Last Spoke.

Straight out of Ohio, RJD2 has been making noise behind the boards as a producer for a Columbus minute. He burst onto the scene on a wave of critical acclaim in 2002 with his debut CD, Deadringer. This past May, he released Since We Last Spoke, an album that Definitive Jux label honcho El-P says will do "for rock what Deadringer did for soul."

The subtly layered Since We Last Spoke uses turntables and samples in a punchy, bombastic way to create rock music, and on that score, it's extraordinarily successful. To put it in local terms, fans of the Cars or Boston (the band, that is) will love the songs on this record. Live, RJ's DJ skills are rock candy—jagged and sweet. Not one for guitar hero–inspired turntable pyrotechnics, he instead focuses more on the artistry of creating sonic environments, using vinyl as the sole ingredient.

Rob Sonic, who joins RJD2 on his current tour, including a stop at the Middle East September 17, has been doing hip-hop for years. He and his cohorts in Sonic Sum made a name for themselves in the late-1990s New York City scene, where they made music with other new-school legends like Mike Ladd, Mos Def and El-P. Since that time, Sonic has continued as a solo artist, releasing numerous songs on singles as well as various compilations. But while 12" singles are the backbone of hip-hop, Sonic is excited at the chance to release a full-length album.

"I miss people putting together a One for All [Brand Nubian] or a Step in the Arena [Gang Starr]," Sonic says." Whether or not they were recorded at the same time, they sound like they were recorded with the same thought—the same ideas were very evident throughout the record. And I purposefully did try to get back to that."

Sonic handled all the production on the album and slotted in only a couple of guest MCs, a rarity in rap these days. He says the disc's title, Telecatessen, is meant to evoke the concept of "television as a delicatessen. You know, you can get your satellites in there with mayonnaise, or your guns with butter." Get some more details on that at the Middle East.

Art in the Open

Local neighborhoods embrace the arts.

Steven Sternbach's Gorge Series can be seen at Gallery AA/B during the South End Open Studios.

If you're among the throngs of Bostonians who picked up and moved on September 1, and your new space needs an artistic flourish—a painting, maybe some sculpture—now is the season to shop, and support local artists to boot. With 12 neighborhoods holding separate events between now and December, and several hundred local artists participating, Boston hosts one of the largest annual open-studio events in the country, a creative free-for-all for the art buff and novice alike.

Now in its 18th year, the South End Open Studios takes place September 18 and 19, and this year showcases original works by more than 250 local talents. "The mix of artists and types of art is always changing, so there's an exciting influx of new people," says producer Chris Farris. Galleries and studios will feature work from emerging newcomers and established local artists alike, and the artists will be on site, mingling and selling artwork in a full array of media. Browsers can expect to see contemporary and traditional works in sculpture, painting and photography, as well as fabric and fiber arts, clothing, jewelry, home decor and everything in between.

It's easier to get there too. The United South End Artists have arranged for free parking, and periodic shuttle buses will run every 15 minutes from the corner of Clarendon Street and Columbus Avenue.

Even if you can't tell Picasso from Peanuts, have no fear—the Open Studios are anything but elitist. "Open is the operative word here," says Farris of the creative community atmosphere. "It's really a celebratory event."

What Went Wrong?

You've been my best friend for years. We met in school, wide-eyed innocents, so many years ago. Remember losing hours of homework due to blackouts? The accidental zeroes due to "computer error"? Pokemon. Sun FYIs. Pink bouncies. Years of laughter, memories and delight. And one fateful day, when my apartment burned down, you helped, unsolicited, unexpectedly, and I promised then, that I would be there whenever, wherever you needed me. Graduation. We went our separate ways, both of us moving out of state, yet through the years we always, always kept in touch. Tens of thousands of hours on the phone. Nine-hour talkathons. So much drama over boyfriends, girlfriends, roommates, co-workers, jobs, life! You told me that you got the feeling that we'd be having conversations like this for the rest of our lives. A year ago, after the end of the most heartbreaking relationship of my life, you asked me to move to Boston, promising me that a life in Beantown would never be empty. I said I'd think about it. Ten months ago, I wrote you a letter, saying I wish you weren't so frightened of intimacy. You haven't spoken to me since, and I've never been sure why, leaving a hole in my heart that remains ever unfilled. It was weeks before I realized you had decided to stop talking to me, my confidant, my bestest friend, the one for whom I've always, to use your words, "charged to the rescue." I love you, from the bottom of my soul, you know. I always have. Let's have at least one more soulful conversation, as we did in years past. No matter what happens, both of our lives will be better for it. I promise.

—Your friend

Prince Concert

It was Aug. 18 at the FleetCenter. You were in Loge 4, it looked like Row 12 or 13, approximately, seat 5. You're a gorgeous, blonde, 30-something and were sitting to the right of two guys—it looked like they were just friends of yours. You had no ring, an off-white short-sleeve pullover and beautiful wavy hair. We said hi briefly as we were leaving. Can we have a longer discussion—maybe of diamonds, pearls and red Corvettes?

Sunday in the Park

I stopped by the Boston Common on Aug. 22 at about 6:30 pm to read for a few minutes before catching a movie. We spotted each other immediately. I was the blond girl on the bench with dark jeans and a teal T-shirt. You were the brunette stranger stretched out on the grass with a book in hand. We regarded one another from behind our respective reading material, but I didn't get a chance to say hello before I had to head for Loews. I'd love to complete the introduction over a coffee...or maybe another Loews selection.

To the Women of Boston...

I'm confused. I can't figure you ladies out. What is it you really want in a guy? I know what you say you want, but it seems so different than what I see. Help me out here, ladies. Why do you stay with a guy who is a total jerk and say "Oh, I just want to be friends" to a guy who would treat you so much better?

Baggage Claim 2, Terminal E

I first noticed you when you were coming down the escalator in Terminal E. Then, as luck would have it, you were waiting for bags at baggage claim 2 in Terminal E at Logan Airport on Aug. 25, just after 8:30 pm. You had on a pink blouse, maroon skirt, black shoes and have reddish dyed hair. Gorgeous pale skin. You must have been coming back to town (maybe for school?) because you pulled two very large bags off of the conveyer belt. I'm kicking myself that I was standing too far away to help you when the first one fell... I should have helped you with that, not the other guy. I cannot get your image out of my mind. You are the most beautiful woman I have ever seen. Amazing.

Martha's Vineyard

It's a wine that reminds me of a person, and this person is one-of-a-kind. She's smart, beautiful and bold. Besides that, she's one of the coolest girls I know and I'm more impressed with her every time we get together. She came to a house party of mine this summer and left me a note that I found the next day saying thanks and that she had a great time. That's when I started to take notice of her, and it happened at a time when I was numb to the world. The thing is, I just got a divorce and I'm not my usual self. She makes me nervous because I'm not sure I'm ready for a relationship even though I know I would want one with her. If anything, at least I know now that not everyone I meet is a dime a dozen and that if you look hard enough, you will find that some people, like some wines, are rare.

Chinatown to Chinatown

You were sitting behind me on the 5 pm Chinatown bus from New York City to Boston Aug. 24. I only noticed you when the guy across from your row loudly asked you if you had the new iPod. I thought you looked nice and would have struck up a conversation but felt shy all of the sudden. I was the Asian girl with a green hooded jacket sitting in the row in front of you by the window. I was with an old high school friend at the time and thought it would be weird of me to just start a conversation when I was supposed to be hanging out with her. Yeah, I know it was a bus, what kind of entertainment is there? Who knows if this even works, but what the hell I gave it a shot. If you would like to get a cup of coffee to talk about the new iPod or the book you were reading, then that would be great!

David Ortiz and the Green Line

You said he was your favorite player. We had brief conversation the night of Aug. 28 while squished on the Green Line after the Red Sox–Tigers game. Me: olive T-shirt, brown hair. I lost track of time and then you were gone with friends at Park Street. If you would like to continue our conversation, e-mail me.

Looking for Jason

We met Aug. 24 at Daisy Buchanan's. You were in the Marines and now are a C.O.—corrections officer—with every Thursday and Friday off. Your only two younger siblings are twins. You drive a blue-green, Explorer-type SUV and you have to put your glasses on to drive. You used to wrestle. You have tattoos. And your birthday is Sept. 13. Could I be any more specific? Me I'm a nurse. My birthday is the day after yours, and I can't wait to hear from you. Get back to me. I don't know how we forgot to exchange phone numbers.

SEPTEMBER 8 – 21, 2004 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

VIRGO AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

If ever you were entitled to toot your own horn or become truly obsessed with the image you're projecting, now would be the time. There's so much positive planetary energy emanating from your sign at the moment, it'll be hard, even for a self-effacing Virgin, to play shy-and-retiring. Instead, take that crucial first step out of your protective shell. Mars provides the nerve, Jupiter the vision, and Virgo the creative force and will. Mercury, back in Virgo on the 10th, restores the perspective you may have lost while it was retrograde last month.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

A weight lifted on Labor Day when your Venus ruler moved out of domesticated, duty-bound Cancer into playful Leo. And while you're not completely free of the Crab's claws—restrictive, responsible Saturn hangs on until next summer—you will probably want to spend more time and money on art, little luxuries and entertainment. Venus' trip through youthful Leo until October 3 can offer more pure pleasure than any other time of the year. Get your priorities straight, eschew the continuing family drama and enjoy the farces and frivolous behavior of your friends.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Maybe the challenging square on the 9th between impulsive Mars and anal-retentive Pluto, your two ruling planets, will come down to a choice between friendship and finances. More likely it'll point out the contradiction between what you personally find valuable and your position on various socio-political matters. The trick in surviving a situation like this is one you've managed to pull off before. Protect your source of income, because while you might go off half-cocked on one crusade or another, you'll invariably return to where the money is.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

It may feel like a conglomerate has taken over your career midheaven and that all you can do is wait impatiently to see if your gig has changed. Maybe the work will become more interesting because expansive, far-sighted Jupiter and the exacting Virgo sun are setting higher goals? Maybe the new boss will be more of a martinet—militant Mars is also in Virgo—than the last one. And maybe there'll be a lot more paperwork, but hopefully only until Mercury finishes its transit of detail-driven Virgo. Any way you look at the situation, four very vocal planets are demanding your attention.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Now is a good time to expand your vision, embrace a higher spiritual power or go back to school so that you can better achieve a long-standing life goal. One that has little to do with your ability to direct other people's resources toward a common—but far from ordinary—end. Because affectionate Venus left your Cancer complement on Labor Day, you might not find as much comfort and pleasure in a domestic relationship as you've been getting. So much for the summer romance and your romantic summer vacation.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Just when everyone's thoughts turn to the fall season, you may get hooked on the prospect of a late-summer romance. Since affectionate Venus moved into in your Leo marriage on Labor Day, the pursuit of romance, luxury and effortless entertainment can easily take precedence over more productive pastimes. No need to worry about paying for your pleasure. All those highly motivated Virgo planets in your house of other people's resources should ensure that you're not stuck with the bill. An investment opportunity is about to knock.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Rely on a close ally. Although his or her command of an issue may annoy you, the sheer amount of accuracy, acumen and native intelligence embedded in your Virgo house of partners right now is reason enough to follow someone else's lead. You might want to strike a blow for independence for the sheer hell of it, but if you need to be reassured or advised on any matter, turn to your mate, agent or attorney. Until the month ends and the sun, Jupiter and Mars move on to Libra, they are your guardian angels.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Your focus becomes sharper, your method of achieving your objectives more direct while your Mars ruler picks up on the intensity powerful Pluto provides. Their motivating square on the 9th ensures that, after the initial challenge is met, a lot of good can be accomplished. Try not to slack off when sociable Venus in your Leo house of romance and recreation offers pleasurable distractions. As tempting as they may be, concentrate on finishing what's been started. You might not have this much physical energy and sheer determination again until the end of January.

.TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Even if you're making noticeable progress—what with all that constructive earth-sign energy emanating from the planets in Virgo—you can still enjoy the perks, the easy loving and little luxuries your Venus ruler provides whenever it visits cheery Leo. This month would be a good time to fix up the house and entertain folks who share your appreciation for the finer things, or to treat yourself and a loved one to a special gift, like jewelry or theater tickets. Although a sensuou Taurus hardly needs a reason to indulge, I'm doing it anyway.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

The message all those planets in your Virgo home base is sending may simply be, move. Shake things loose, get out of your rut, change your environment and you'll change your life. Whether or not this tack will work is debatable (as are most rationales Virgo presents), but one thing is fairly certain. Your questioning attitude and the ensuing argument will put more pressure on your partner. Push might actually come to shove when Pluto in your marriage house is challenged on and by 9/11. Also know that you're in a semi-transitory phase that should end with the autumn equinox.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

A new fall semester can ring the school bells lodged in fond, and probably false, memories of childhood. This time of year your Virgo house of lore and learning is lit like a day-glo marker, calling your attention to the sense of security you enjoyed when you had a routine to follow. Moon children born in the '60s could take on a special assignment as growth-oriented Jupiter and courageous Mars energize the placement in your natal chart of Uranus and Pluto in health-conscious Virgo. This could be a generational thing coming to fruition.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

After waiting more than a year for your annual infusion of goodness and mercy, harmonious Venus finally entered your sign on Labor Day. If your sun ruler wasn't reflecting selective and discreet Virgo vibes, your desire to please and be pleased in return might get totally out of hand. But on 9/11, as the sun and passionate Pluto toss fire bolts at each other, you're liable to succumb to the Lord of the Underworld's dark compelling charms. Then what? Have patience, the light at the end of the tunnel appears on the equinox.

As new business owners, making a choice in advertising avenues is a difficult decision. Regardless of the size of your advertising budget, you must be selective in choosing the medium that best reaches your target audience. At The Bustonian, we researched many avenues that appeared to be "Win-Win" situations, but when it came decision time, we chose to focus on the Improper Bostonian. Over the past few months, we've established a strong relationship with our Improper representative, Katie Schmidt, who has really helped us get the best response possible from our advertising dollars!!! We've found the entire Improper staff to be extremely nice and helpful. All in all, we're very pleased with the revenue that The Improper Bostonian has helped generate for our new business and we highly recommend investing in the Improper to work for you!!!

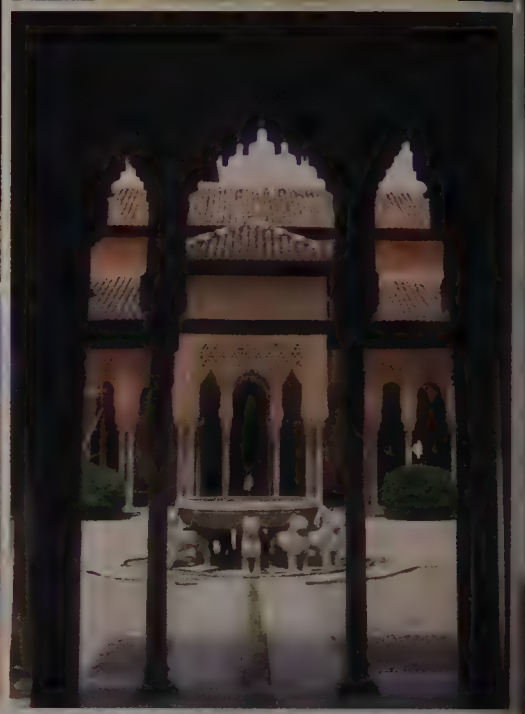
LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF



Clockwise from upper left: the Alhambra at sunset; the gorge in Ronda; Duncan and Paul demonstrate proper bullfighting technique; the courtyard of the lions in the Alhambra; a pool with a view; the Moorish courtyard at Ronda; packing the Peugeot.

WHAT I DID ON MY SUMMER VACATION....

Countless poets have been inspired by Spain's southernmost region, Andalusia, but the one I found myself quoting again and again was the immortal Grover from Sesame Street: "Granada, Cordoba, Sevilla, where butter is called mantequilla..."

At least, that's the way the friend who dropped me off at the airport remembered it, and that's how I repeated it, incessantly, for the next 12 days, until my traveling companions were ready to kill me. But I'll get to that.

Our trip got off to a rocky start. Upon landing in Malaga, we went to pick up the convertible we'd reserved. We waited an hour, in a fume-filled underground garage, until I was ready to go back inside and do some whup-ass on the Hertz guy, but thankfully, Duncan stopped me.

"I just realized—the black car we've been standing in front of for 45 minutes is ours. The hard-top folds into the trunk."

Trying to open the trunk took another 45 minutes, until someone showed us that you press the middle of the 0 in the car's model number: 303.

"That's like expecting us to know you open it by slapping your ass, spinning around three times and doing a genie blink," said Duncan.

"Ask them where the gas tank is," said Paul.

Finally under way, we drove along winding two-lane highways to Ronda—a Moorish hill-town built on a limestone outcropping. The two halves of Ronda are connected by a pair of ancient bridges that span a 400-foot gorge with a river running through it, while the edges of town drop off into cliffs commanding spectacular views of the surrounding countryside.

"This place is a suicidal maniac's wet dream," said Duncan, peering over the edge.

We watched a full moon rise over the hills that night, and spent the next several days seeing the sights: the Mondragon Palace, the Arab Baths, and the famous bullring, where the sport took its modern form. One morning, I walked 400-and-something steps down a shaft beneath the House of the Moorish King and stood looking up at the town from the bottom of the gorge, enjoying myself enormously until it dawned on me that I had to climb all the way back up.

We said goodbye reluctantly to Ronda and drove through vast undulating fields of sunflowers to the legendary city of Granada—the last capital of Moorish Spain, where, despite blast-furnace heat, you can see snow on the mountaintops. Our hotel was a converted 15th-century convent. As expected, my room was barely big enough to turn around in. Less expected was the squirting room freshener (the kind you see in gas station bathrooms). By morning, I smelled like I should've been dangling from someone's rearview mirror.

Granada's biggest attraction is the Alhambra, a complex that houses the administrative and pleasure palaces of the Sultan, along with some of the world's most beautiful gardens and a fortress that once garrisoned thousands of troops.

"Wow," marveled Duncan. "It's like Allah-palooza."

Perhaps the only thing more breathtaking than walking through the Alhambra is watching the sun set over it from the Albaicin, the old Arab quarter. Granada's cathedral, meanwhile, is certainly memorable, not only because Ferdinand and Isabella are buried there (along with their daughter, Juana the Mad), but also because the candles are automated: Drop in a coin and a bulb lights up.

I ate one of the best dinners of my life in Granada, at a restaurant called the Puerta del Carmen, and indeed, one of Spain's principal charms is the food, like the serrano ham served at breakfast, lunch and dinner. (As someone pointed out, the national motto could be "A pig at every meal.") We did encounter some daunting menu items (beef served in "a reduction sauce of Pedro Ximenex"), but overall, our only food complaint was that the bread was dry. At lunch one day, Duncan finally broke down and, amazingly enough, asked, "How do you say butter in Spanish?"

For the ten-trillionth time, I sang the Grover song.

"I hate you," said Paul.

"No butter. Only olive oil," said the waiter.

After paying for lunch, we crossed the street and saw a toy store with stuffed animals in the window. Front and center was Grover.

Of course, we bought him and brought him with us to a charming country hotel called Almunia del Valle, which translates roughly as "If you made it up the twisting, pitted donkey path to get here, you're welcome to stay the night."

A few days of R&R followed, as we sat by the pool, playing backgammon and picking fresh figs off the trees. Unfortunately, I never got around to reading any of the books in my room, like the tantalizingly titled Asesinatos por Amor ("Murders by Love"). The jacket promised "Una cronica negra de la España erotica."

Overall, I learned a lot about Spain on this trip. For one thing, it's a very dusty country. For another, it has some of the slipperiest cobblestones in Europe, especially after a few drinks. But it also has a lot going for it. Gorgeous scenery. Rich history. The fact that no one there has ever even heard of the Olsen twins. Oh, and one other thing: They might call butter mantequilla, but good luck getting any at a restaurant.

FROM THE EDITOR

HEAR HERE

In all things rock and roll, our dedicated music editor, Paul Robicheau, guides us, offering previews in each issue of some of the most interesting acts to tour Boston. In this issue, he turns his attention to the many talented musicians who call Boston home, presenting his annual list of 10 buzzworthy local bands. Topping the list are our cover models, the art-punk quartet Read Yellow, currently on tour in Europe. You can catch them, and most of the groups in our top 10, at Boston-area clubs this fall. (Someday, you might say you saw them when.)

The exploration of Boston-born music continues in Robicheau's story about two major band comebacks—the Pixies and Mission of Burma—and in J. Bennett's feature on local labels that are achieving national success. Finally, Ezra Dyer looks at the tribute bands who make a living imitating the superstars—from Beefy DC's take on Angus Young et al to Draw the Line's near-perfect impersonation of Boston's beloved rock outfit, Aerosmith.

A HOSTILE MERGER

The final exam for people trying to become Bostonians ("Eight Simple Steps to Becoming a Bostonian," Sept. 8): Make the merge onto 93 North from the South Shore Plaza (Route 37, Exit 6). You have about 1/16th of a mile to accelerate to 65 mph and cross three lanes of cars that aren't going to move because they're trying to get onto Route 3 South. Bonus points awarded for people who can do it while drinking a cup of Dunkin' Donuts coffee.

ON VACATION

In reference to Jonathan Soroff's article "What I Did on my Summer Vacation" (Sept. 8), as an Andalusian Spanish couple living in Boston, we would like to point out a few things.

First of all, we don't really understand the difficulty Soroff had opening the trunk of a European car, but 45 minutes ought to be more than enough. He was traveling around places that were built and inhabited more than 20 centuries ago, and even though we don't expect him to understand this, I'm pretty sure there's more there to talk about than "a suicidal maniac's wet dream." Soroff is just another typical guiri if he asked for "mantequilla" in a Spanish restaurant. He may not see the difference, but it's as rude as leaving a Boston restaurant without giving a proper tip. And we really feel sorry for him if he doesn't enjoy Spanish olive oil and bread and finds Spanish bread too dry.

Apart from its being a dusty country (in Soroff's words), we thank him for considering Spain worthwhile to visit. There you can find a wonderful mixture of unbelievable Phoenician, Greek, Roman, Arabic, Celtic, neoclassic and modernist art; mountains, beaches and wonderful weather; nice people, great gastronomy and a lot of fun. And with all due respect, we don't care about the Olsen twins, even though we do know who they are.

—MONICA GARCIA ALLOZA and ANGEL MARTIN-ROMO CAMACHO
Boston

I just read Soroff's article on his summer trip to Spain and laughed out loud at the Grover quotation. However, PBS child of the '70s that I am, I have to correct him. The three cities he sings about to the poor, blue, mustachioed schlub in the restaurant are: Granada, Cádiz and Sevilla. Am I a dork or what? Stamp your feet and join me in a chorus of olé olé olé!

FLIRTY, PRETTY, YOUNG

Re: "Flirty, Pretty Things" (Sept. 8). While the piece was beautifully photographed, what I saw was a lovely young teenage girl dressed in her big sister's or her mother's clothes. Your fashion producers should balance the images with the intended audience.

MUMMY DEAREST

"If you can figure out how to describe this in two sentences, I'll be impressed," says Matthew DuPlessie, president and CEO of 5W!TS (say "five wits"), the company that produces the live-action game Tomb, set to open September 23 across from the Landmark Center on Brookline Avenue. Well, allow us to try: Tomb is a bit like stepping into an Indiana Jones movie, with teams of five to 15 explorers entering a stone crypt armed with flashlights and a mission. Depending on how you fare at the challenges of the Pharaoh, you either get to see a spectacular finale or experience a walk toward the white light, i.e., death (a successful quest takes about 45 minutes to complete).

There are three rooms in the Tomb, and the challenges include both feats of strength—such as moving the Pharaoh's statue (pictured above left)—and mental puzzles, the latter of which are complicated by the unseen Pharaoh's booming admonitions and a few other special-effects surprises that reflect DuPlessie's experience working for Universal Studios. The challenges can be set for different difficulty levels, but be forewarned: Matching hieroglyphics tiles on the floor with a pattern on the wall is never easy, particularly when the ones on the wall begin to spin.

If you make it past the second room, you'll attempt to free the Pharaoh's soul, but death earns you an early exit to the gift shop and coffee bar, which is at least preferable to getting smooshed by a giant boulder. Adult tickets cost $15 weekdays, $20 weekends; children's tickets are a few bucks cheaper. 5W!TS, 186 Brookline Ave., Boston (617-375-9487). www.5-wits.com. —Ezra Dyer

BATTLE OF THE MASCOTS

Brigham's Ice Cream and J.P. Licks maintained a peaceful coexistence on Jamaica Plain's Centre Street for 20 some years. And no one expected anything different when Emack & Bolio's replaced Brigham's in late June. Nothing wrong with a little friendly competition. After all, it's ice cream—there' s always room for more. So now the big question is, Will everything stay as peace-loving as a Ben & Jerry's tag line now that Emack has unveiled its 16-foot mosaic moose? Stoney, as the moose is called, seems to bear a resemblance to J.P. Licks' longtime cow mascot Clementine, which has been standing tall in Licks' flagship shop for decades. Could the moose be Emack's attempt to steal a slice of Jamaica Plain's ice cream pie and create a rockier road in the process? Emack owner Adam Goldberg insists everything's cool in ice cream land. "There's no competition whatsoever," he says. "Were just trying to come up with something cool and give that area of the store its own little life." Licks owner and founder Vincent Petryk is equally mellow about the mascot situation. "There's always been two ice cream shops in J.P. I was the new kid for 20 years and now [Emack's] is." Petryk even gives Stoney his stamp of approval. "I've been using shattered glass sculpture in my store since '93, so I really do like it." His only jab: "I'm just glad we remain the only homemade ice cream shop in J.P." —Jessica Iredale

COUCH CRITICS

For couch potatoes, the fall TV season is almost like a fantasy football draft. It takes a delicate balance of new and the tried-and-true to create a winning lineup. Well-bred rookies, like Joey, show promise. But what they can actually deliver remains to be seen. With a few good reviews, underdogs like Father of the Pride can lead the team. And it never hurts to have a few hot shots (The O.C.) and seasoned MVPs (Law & Order, Everybody Loves Raymond) on the roster. We asked four local entertainment experts—KISS 108's Matt Siegel, Globe TV critic Matthew Gilbert and the Herald's Inside Track gals, Gayle Fee and Laura Raposa—what's hot and what's not in TV land this season.

Improper Bostonian: What are your picks for the best new shows from the fall lineup?

Track Gals: Lost looks cool, because they're promising cannibalism! Also CSI: NY, 'cause Gary Sinise is hot. Desperate Housewives looks to be the new Melrose Place (yipee!) and we're excited about Boston Legal for the William Shatner factor.

Matt Siegel: Boston Legal—James Spader is fabulous; William Shatner is great camp. Cool choice.

Matthew Gilbert: If John Waters had produced Knots Landing, he might have come up with something like Desperate Housewives. This soap opera turns cheery suburban America into a blackly comic spectacle. Other pluses: the great Felicity Huffman and Marcia Cross, who could exceed her campy work as the scarred villain of Melrose Place. Lost also looks good. I mean, it really looks good, with lots of slick, island cinematography. The action-adventure series follows plane-crash survivors on an uncharted desert isle, with no Jeff Probst to direct their anger at. It's from J.J. Abrams, the innovative maker of Alias.

IB: Predictions for the biggest letdown?

TG: Biggest letdown will be Jason Alexander's new show, Listen Up, because he'll never be as funny as George Costanza, and Jack & Bobby because it's from the same insufferable blowhards who brought you The West Wing.

MS: LAX, biggest letdown.

MG: Center of the Universe isn't just a disappointing ripoff of Everybody Loves Raymond. It's a disturbing realization that TV can demean even John Goodman, Jean Smart and Olympia Dukakis. Ed Asner as a sex-crazed dad? Grant me a pass.

IB: What show are you most happy to see return?

TG: Arrested Development, Scrubs, CSI.

MS: The Shield on FX. It's the best show on TV.

MG: It's a tie. I fell for Arrested Development last season and not just because I'm a critic and am required to do so by law. The instant I saw Portia de Rossi visit a prison wearing a "Slut" T-shirt, I knew I was in love truly, madly and deeply. The O.C. is also beckoning. Seth, see you soon.

IB: Favorite sitcom starring an overweight man and his improbably hot wife?

TG: The Simpsons. (Marge is so hot....)

MG: Dr. Vegas starring Joe Pantoliano and Rob Lowe. OK, so it's not a sitcom.

IB: Will Joey be the next Frasier or the next Joanie Loves Chachi*?*

TG: Thumbs up for Joey.

MS: Although I haven't seen it, I think it'll be another Joanie Loves Chachi simply because on Friends, Joey was the neighbor that popped in. He wasn't the central character. It's going to be a tough role for him. But they do have the best writers on it, so who knows.

MG: It'll be the next Rhoda. —J.I.

SMALL PLATES IN A BIGGER SPACE

A Prospering Piattini... After three years of appeasing passersby on Newbury Street with its selection of Italian small plates and wine flights, Piattini Wine Café is set to open its second location, on Columbus Avenue, next to the Castle, by the end of the month. The plates are still small, but everything at the new Piattini is bigger, including the menu, which allows Piattini to explore more culinary options. But expect most of the focus to remain on the small dishes and the 100-bottle wine list. We certainly plan to take one down and pass it around. 162 Columbus Ave., Boston (617-423-2021).

Vintage Victoria's... For 55 years, Victoria Dining served as a staple of quick and easy eating on Mass. Ave. before temporarily shutting down for renovations late this spring. But on July 15, owner Jay Hajj (proprietor of Mike's City Diner in the South End) reopened the spot and renamed it Victoria's Diner. "At one point, this was the top diner in the city, and hopefully it will be again," Hajj says. Victoria's serves breakfast, lunch and dinner every day (with many of the same menu items that have helped make Mike's a hit) while boasting a full bar and vintage '50s and '60s dining decor. July also brought a little excitement to the Hajj family's world in the form of a brand new baby daughter. Her name? Victoria, of course. 1024 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-442-5965).

Sam I Am... Sam Adams recently revamped its Web site, and while the fancy Flash graphics are nice, we're most impressed by the "Best Job in the World" page, where founder Jim Koch calculates how many beers he's drunk at work. "I started the company in 1984," he writes on www.samuel adams.com, "and I've probably averaged two Samuel Adams beers per day since then. That means I've had approximately 15,000 beers on the job. Work, work, work." We're sure Jim's liver is thankful he didn't start a vodka company.

You may have noticed if you've walked through the Prudential Center lately that cosmetics store Sephora has changed significantly, doubling its size. Interestingly, Sephora remained open during its two months of renovations, doing all the work overnight. Expanding on its already impressive list of products, the store has added dozens of new brands including Pixi, Pinkie Swear and Diane von Furstenberg. It has also added several new skin care lines and the popular GoSmile teeth-whitening system that's a hit with celebs. Prudential Center, 800 Boylston St., Boston (617-262-4200).

BIRTHDAY DISCOUNTS

There's no better time than your birthday to cash in on the generosity of local businesses. So when your big day rolls around, stop by one of these spots and rake in the birthday perks.

Ben & Jerry's

Multiple Locations

No birthday would be complete without a stop at one of these famous ice cream shops, because lucky for you, they'll give you a small cone or cup for free.

Firenze

9 Babcock St., Brookline (617-738-7707).

The folks at Firenze will treat the birthday boy or girl to a free Italian meal. But drinks are still full price, so just drink the price of your meal and you'll come out even.

Jake Ivory's

9 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-247-1222).

Jake Ivory's rolls out the red carpet for birthday par ties, offering line privileges, a cake, Champagn toast, on-stage participation and special song re quests. Birthday boys and girls get in for free—oth ers pay $13.

Tapeo

266 Newbury St., Boston, 617-267-4799.

Go in for a couple of plates of tapas and ge showered with bubbles by the Tapeo staff whil they sing "Happy Birthday."

33 Restaurant and Lounge

33 Stanhope St., Boston, 617-572-3311.

You can have a glass of Champagne on the house a this Back Bay hot spot. Dessert will cost you, bu that's not to say there isn't an incentive for orderin sweets: Birthday desserts are topped with a liv sparkler.

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Double Trouble...A school that actually encourages alcohol consumption? It's true. Dublin Down, a new bar set to open on September 23 in Packard's Corner in Allston, will not only serve as a place to relax and watch the Pats or Sox, but will also double as Dublin University, Boston's newest bartending school. Students at Dublin U are given free job placement assistance at local joints like the Foggy Goggle while earning their degree in boozenomics. Best of all, they won't have to travel far for that all-important after-class thirst quencher. 1098 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-424-0200).

Mamma's Boy... It sounds like a character from Dynasty or Dallas. but Blair Delmonico is actually a new store in the Prudential Center. After 15 years designing jewelry for upscale retail giants like Bloomingdales and Harrods, David Salvatore decided to open his own shop. Three years later he's on his third boutique, which opened this past summer. Named for Salvatore's fashionista mom, Blair Delmonico carries a line of high-end knits, suits, handbags and scarves, as well as the designer's signature Swarovski crystal necklaces and bracelets, which are a huge hit with brides. 800 Boylston St., Boston (617-424-6777).

Minty Fresh... For 12 years, native Vermonters and now Brookline residents Brooke Garber and Stephanie Nist have dreamed of opening their own clothing store. On July 23, their dream became reality when the two 25-year-olds opened Mint Julep in Coolidge Corner. "We have clothes ranging from $20 t-shirts to $300 dresses, as well as jewelry, scarves and handbags," says Garber, a 2001 graduate of BU. The girls carry labels like Helen Wang, Joe's Jeans and Splendid and have set up an innovative "boyfriend couch" with piles of magazines to keep the other half occupied. Julep also sells merchandise from Brookline jeweler Hillary Olk, vintage headbands, scarves and handbags, as well as Mor, an Australian line that specializes in bath and body products. It's your one-stop shop for everything girly. 1302 Beacon St., Brookline (617-232-3600).

Somers Time... Chances are you've spent a tipsy night or two inside one of John J. Somers' watering holes. The Somers Pub empire, which already includes Henessy's, the Green Dragon, Kennedy's Mid-Town and Club Q, brought a new child into the family September 14. In the former space of Grand Canal, Marquee offers an international-themed lunch and dinner menu and boasts a marbletop bar, leather seating and large, plasma TVs. We'll see if it fares as well as New York "it" club Marquee. 57 Canal St., Boston (617-523-1112).

Dude Looks Like a Tour Guide... Talking Street, which already offers walking cell-phone tours in New York, has kicked it up a notch for its Beantown debut. The Boston tour, narrated by Aerosmith's Steven Tyler, includes 17 stops from the Public Garden to the North End, plus a bonus stop at Fenway Park, if you're so inclined. Besides giving walkers insight into Boston's history, the tour offers the added value of listening to one of rock's most famous voices read lines like, "This park is quite an oasis, eh?" The tour costs $5.95, but make sure you've got lots of anytime minutes. (617-262-8687). www.talkingstreet.com.

PITY THE FOOL

As if I didn't have enough time-management problems, along comes fantasy football.

This year it finally happened: I joined a fantasy football league. I never really got the attraction of fantasy football, but since nearly all of my friends participate in fantasy leagues, I was tired of being left out of the conversations. I'd be watching a game with someone, and he'd say "Keyshawn Johnson killed me last week on my fantasy team," and I'd reply "Yeah, he's a really good…basketball player?" I was as lost in a conversation about fantasy football as I'd be if I were in a room where everyone was speaking Swahili and I only spoke Maa. Also, if you don't know the names of lots of football players, you're totally gay.

I actually do have a little fantasy football experience. Back in the eighth grade, all the boys played football at recess. My friend Rod and I were the captains. Every recess my team got killed. So one day, Rod and I stayed inside and planned a competitive adjustment of the teams. We each had an imaginary $2,000 with which to purchase our teams (this seemed a properly lofty sum at the time), and we bid until we had new, equitable rosters. Right away, Rod paid roughly $1,995 for the a 16-year-old kid who outran everyone, and he subsequently kept winning every game. I learned a few valuable fantasy football lessons: A star player can make or break a team, and you can't win at schoolyard football when the other team has a kid who can drive to school.

But setting up an NFL fantasy team is a lot more complicated than buying your junior-high classmates. For one thing, you need to name your team and make a logo. I gave far more thought to this than I did to other aspects of the process, like selecting players. Regardless of how my team, the Sucka Fools, performs, I think everyone in my league ought to agree that Mr. T flexing his biceps and wearing a football helmet with his mohawk coming out the top is the funniest logo. When it comes to fantasy football-team logo design, it helps to have co-workers who are, say, magazine art directors.

Next came draft day. Our league has 12 teams, and since I'm the newest owner I had to pick last. Originally I figured that since I don't know what I'm doing and my team would finish last anyway, I'd select my players based on who has the best names, and I designated Deon Dyer for an early round. Eventually, though, I settled on a mix of players with funny names and players who are actually good.

Luck of the fantasy football draw was on my side, and I ended up with a respectable team. I feel the Sucka Fools match up well against any team in the league, including the Sin City Steamers, the Shockers, the Upper Tankers and even the mighty Blumps. Everyone seemed confident in their choices, though. "Is there a place on this site where I can certify that my team is going to dominate?" asked Upper Tankers owner Whitmore on the draft message board in the final round. "The only thing you dominate is your toilet," replied Jesse, owner of the Steamers, adding, "Nothing left now but a bunch of Whitmores." More such highbrow discourse was directed at Krishan, who participated via a dial-up connection in India and suffered chronic computer problems. When his connection went down, the computer inexplicably picked seven quarterbacks. There's a joke about outsourcing in there somewhere.

You'll be happy to know that after the first week of the season, the Suckas are 1-0, having triumphed over the Steamers. I'm now totally obsessed with fantasy football. I'm keeping track of players I don't have in case I want to pick them up. I'm rooting for bad things to happen to real-life players on opposing teams. I find myself watching a Jets game and thinking, "Wouldn't it be great if Curtis Martin got picked up on drug charges and suspended for the rest of the season?" I now pay close attention to Arizona's depth chart, whereas last year I thought depth charts were used exclusively by sea captains.

I NOW PAY CLOSE ATTENTION TO ARIZONA'S DEPTH CHART, WHEREAS LAST YEAR I THOUGHT DEPTH CHARTS WERE USED EXCLUSIVELY BY SEA CAPTAINS.

I'm totally on board with fantasy football. It gives me a reason to care about games other than the Patriots', as I check out how my players around the league are faring each week. Fantasy football helps me stay in touch with my friends. And if my quarterback, Tom Brady, stinks the place up, I can act like I'm mad at him for a reason other than insane jealousy. iB

WILL FRANCONA UNDERMINE THE CURSE KILLERS?

Let's hope that come October, the Sox skipper vanquishes the ghosts of his predecessor.

The Boston Red Sox finally look like the team we thought they were back in April. Last spring, the curse-killing crusaders, with the addition of Curt Schilling and Keith Foulke, looked like the team to beat. You could say the same thing now.

But it's time to be honest with our reservations, or more accurately, reservation: Despite the turnaround, I am not a believer in manager Terry Francona. Not yet, anyway.

I remember when the Red Sox interviewed him for the gig in Boston. Much was made of the fact that Francona arrived with his laptop and talked about the importance of playing the percentages. Basically he was supposed to be the anti–Grady Little, bringing the new numbers-crunching approach to Yawkey Way.

During my college days, I had an internship at a TV station in Philadelphia. And last winter my mentor from the station warned me about Francona. "You don't want Terry Francona as your manager," said my former boss. "Who's the youngest manager in baseball?" he asked. I said it was Eric Wedge of the Indians.

"No," he said. "Curt Schilling."

The inference is that Schilling is in charge, especially when he's on the mound. That's what happened in Philadelphia and it appears to have happened in Boston, too.

The Red Sox are so talented, man-to-man, that regardless of the leadership, or lack thereof, they're going to have a shot at the end of the game more times than not. This is a $130 million lineup. The Red Sox have spent more money on noncontributors B.K. Kim ($5.5 million), Trot Nixon ($7 million) and Ramiro Mendoza ($3 million) than most teams spend on their superstars. But because of the team's depth, their lack of production is no problem.

Which brings me back to Francona. He is needed now, more than ever. I can't tell you how many times I've looked into the dugout and there's Terry, realizing that his starting pitcher is nearing the end of his day. But instead of nestling up to his pitching coach for some words of wisdom, readying the team for a change on the mound, Terry stares and does nothing.

Too many times, Sox relievers seem to be caught by surprise and aren't fully warmed up when they're needed. It doesn't take a phone call from Theo to understand that if your pitcher is coming up on 100 pitches, you have your options ready in the bullpen.

And I don't want to play Joan Rivers and become a fashion critic, but even the red sweatshirt Francona wears doesn't lool the part. It looks more like the garb for th day's batting-practice pitcher, which fit with his demeanor.

The line was drawn in the sand early i Francona's tenure, when Pedro skipped ou of the season opener well before the fina out. It continued with Schilling's tempe tantrums when Francona pleaded with hin to give up the ball. We'll skip over Manny peccadillos because Manny stuff coul happen under anyone's watch. But hov about Kevin Millar throwing Francon under the bus over his playing time?

Right now, though, most fans have for gotten Francona's brain cramps. He's in th running for Manager of the Year, believe i or not. So when the playoffs come aroun and the chill of October air smacks yo freshly in the face the way a high and tigh Pedro Martinez fastball smacks agains Jason Varitek's mitt, ask yourself: "Is Terr Francona ready for prime time?"

> THE RED SOX HAVE THE PITCHING, THE HITTING AND THE DEPTH. THEY ALSO HAVE WHAT THESE EYES SEE AS MEDIOCRE MANAGING.

The games are about to get serious. Ulti mately they'll turn into one-run, nail-bit ing affairs. How will this team respond Will the guys in the Red Sox clubhouse sa that their skipper is more prepared than th other guy? Will the Sox finally brea through and accomplish what a lot of u thought they would before the seaso started—winning the World Series?

They have the pitching, the hitting an the depth. They also have what these eye see as mediocre managing. I hope I'm wrong. I hope Francona's imitation of for mer Patriots coach Pete Carroll (nice gu in the wrong place) is just that, an imita tion. I hope he's learned that being th manager means you're in charge, no ques tions asked. Because while the Red So may have made the month of August lool easy, October is anything but. IB

TONY MCLEAN

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Theater producer Tony McLean is the president of Broadway in Boston and Clear Channel Entertainment's Boston theater division. The Dorchester native attended St. Peter's School and graduated from the Boston Archdiocesan Choir School and Boston College High School before receiving a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree from Boston University's School of Theater Arts in 1979. Since then, McLean has done stints as theater manager for the Parker Playhouse in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., the Royal Poinciana Playhouse in Palm Beach, and the Saenger Theatre in New Orleans, and has acted as company manager and/or general manager for at least 35 major productions. In addition to producing Beauty and the Beast on Broadway, he served as vice president of domestic touring for Disney Theatrical Productions, where his responsibilities included directing domestic tours of Beauty and the Beast, Elton John and Tim Rice's Aida, and The Lion King. A member of the Association of Theatrical Press Agents and Managers, the American Theatre Wing and the League of American Theatres and Producers, McLean serves on the board of directors for StageSource and Arts/Boston. He lives in the South End.

Jonathan Soroff: Is it more important to you personally to put on a show that's a commercial or an artistic success?

Tony McLean: Either or?

JS: Yup. Your next show can either be a complete work of genius, one for the ages, but nobody is going to buy tickets, or it's a box-office bonanza. Which would it be?

TM: Well, if by artistic you mean a critical success, I don't pay attention to critics, so I don't care. You always have to go with the artistic. It has longer-ranging consequences. There are plenty of shows that make money and five years later no one remembers them. But if it's really well done artistically, it's bound to be popular. I think anything that's a commercial success in the theater has some artistry to it.

JS: What's your response to people who think a huge conglomerate like Clear Channel puts the screws on smaller arts organizations?

TM: Where's the proof? I'd say they're uninformed.

JS: But you control the lion's share of stages in this city, along with access to billboards, radio, a lot of money for advertising. It's a huge corporation, and a lot of people say it's muscling out the smaller theater groups.

TM: I think we work well together, and I'd argue we support each other. The more theater there is, the more demand for theater there will be.

> I TELL YOUNG DIRECTORS, "IF YOU REALLY WANT TO KNOW WHAT THEATER'S ABOUT, GO TO A BASEBALL GAME." THE TENSION, THE PLAY, THE CROWD'S REACTION, THE DYNAMICS OF IT ARE AMAZING.

JS: How about the people who own Clear Channel—are they the right-wing, reactionary zealots I've read about in the press?

TM: [Laughs.] Well, they're people who live in Texas. I don't really know them outside of business.

JS: Overall state of the American theater?

TM: Very healthy in most cities and small towns, but Broadway's become much more specific in the last 20 years, as in not as many new works. What's happening around the country is much more exciting. In any major city, there's something interesting happening, which wasn't the case 25 years ago.

JS: How much in theater is determined by money?

TM: A lot, and the economics have changed so much that people don't want to take risks. Also, the public doesn't go to the theater the way they did. There's so much good drama on television. But what's filled that gap, which people fail to look at, is the regional theaters. When I was growing up here, there was no ART or Huntington or Súgán or Gloucester. There were only the Broadway shows that came through Boston. So my point is that we're getting it, but we're getting it from different places.

JS: How much did it cost to put on The Lion King*?*

TM: I can't tell you that, but I will tell you that it costs about a million dollars just to put in a show—for the trucks to pull up, to load it in, set it up and tech it—in a Broadway theater. So if it's $8 million to produce a musical, one-eighth is just to get it through the door. You also have to advertise the heck out of it. So it's very expensive to do what we do in Boston, because this is one of the most expensive cities in America for labor and for advertising.

JS: Is Stephen Sondheim the second coming?

TM: [He is] to people who think that Stephen Sondheim is the second coming. I'm a long-time fan.

JS: What circle of hell does Andrew Lloyd Webber belong in?

JS: C'mon, Andrew Lloyd Root-Canal?

TM: You're talking about someone I've met and know. I think he was a more interesting composer before he became a producer. I remember how fresh Joseph seemed and how we all hung around listening to Jesus Christ Superstar for the first time. It was a revelation. I'd say he hasn't strayed too much from the way he writes, which is why people criticize him for repeating himself, but he's great.

JS: You have a huge collection of theater memorabilia. Strangest or most interesting item?

TM: Oh, God. I have an angel that goes on top of my Christmas tree that was crocheted for me by Glynnis Johns. I have a piece of the Berlin Wall given to me by Tandy Cronin when she went with her mother, Jessica Tandy, to the premiere of Driving Miss Daisy in Germany, and the Wall came down. Stuff like that.

JS: Show tune you find yourself whistling whe you walk down the street or are stuck in traffi TM: These days, it's "Defying Gravit from Wicked.

JS: Do you listen to show tunes constantly?

TM: Almost exclusively.

JS: Do you prefer musicals to straight theate

TM: No. Actually, I prefer going to se nonmusicals, particularly in Boston. I de with musicals so much that I prefer to se plays. And I like not to read about or kno anything about what I'm going to see b fore I see it.

JS: Do critics affect the box office?

TM: If you let them. It depends on your a budget. Unfortunately, too many local th ater companies have to rely on the criti to sell their shows, which is a sham They're at the mercy of the critics, and the critics don't like it, their sales stop.

JS: What do you think of Boston critics?

TM: I'm indifferent to them. I don't giv them the power to control what we do. B some of them are my friends and I lik them as people.

JS: Favorite form of everyday theater—people on a subway platform, or in the park?

TM: Sporting events. I always tell youn directors, "If you really want to know wha theater's about, go to a baseball game The tension, the play, the crowd's reactio the players' reactions. The dynamics of are amazing.

JS: Sexiest thing you've ever seen on the stage

TM: The most sensual was two performe in Cirque du Soleil who did the livi statue. It was incredible.

JS: So if all the world's a stage, who deserve top billing?

TM: God. Or whatever your equivalent is

JS: Last question: Is life really a cabaret?

TM: No. More like musical comedy: brig and fun, with a little conflict in the midd but a happy ending…I hope. iB

10 BANDS THAT rock

The '80s are back. Not the bad hair and cheesy keyboards, but from the Pixies-influenced squall of Read Yellow and the taut power-pop of Brett Rosenberg to the synth-iced crunch of the Information and the stylish pop of Ad Frank, echoes of the '80s have hit Boston's clubs. Not that every act fits that mold. The only common ground these 10 rock outfits share is that they're currently among Boston's most distinctive acts.

READ YELLOW

Read Yellow builds creative tension by cranking things up a few notches and letting go of the handle along the way. "Things almost fall apart," says guitarist Jesse Vuona, "but then they work their way back together. Even though there's total chaos, we know exactly where we are."

The art-punk quartet found its sound on its full-length debut Radios Burn Faster, which marked a quantum leap beyond a 2003 EP. Some of the credit goes to producer Paul Kolderie, who has previously worked with the Pixies, a band that once blazed the same UMass-to-Boston trail as Read Yellow and serves as a primary influence on the band, along with Sonic Youth and Fugazi.

"If you're into something, it's going to show," Vuona says, although he adds, "Our influences shed away when we're onstage." Indeed, Read Yellow (pronounced red yellow) burns brightest onstage, where Vuona, drummer Paul Koelle, bassist-singer Michelle Kay Freivald and singer-guitarist Evan Kenney (who also takes an occasional stab at trumpet) collide with uncanny musical and physical abandon, igniting like a solar flare.

"If you're going to see a band, you want to see something striking, and we're really passionate about our music," says Vuona, whose band just got to play England's Reading Festival. "I'd much rather hear someone say they like the live show better than the record. If your live show sucks, you have a problem, 'cause that's when you're actually creating."

Read Yellow plays Great Scott October 10.

INSIGHT AND EDAN

Insight and Edan are two of Boston's most respected hip-hop Renaissance men, working as producers, MCs and DJs. But while they make records separately, the real treat comes when the duo rock the stage as a tag-team. "There's a lot you can do with two people that you can't do with one," says Insight.

Edan adds, "It's a blessing to be able to work with somebody where their motivation is the art. When you join forces, the art will benefit."

Club audiences certainly benefit when Insight and Edan go head-to-head with edgy tradeoffs, Insight's buzzing precision and flow contrasting sharply with Edan's more blunt bravado. And to top it off, each takes a cut at the turntables.

"The fact that he does beats, rhymes and cuts too is a good thing," says Insight, whose CD The Blast Radius features a collaboration with Edan. "We don't have to explain things. We just know. When we put the set together, some of the lyrics are his and some are mine, and we flip back and forth."

Born in St. Thomas and weaned on his musician father's calypso, Insight (Andre Todman) lived in New York and California, digging hip-hop from the Sugarhill Gang to A Tribe Called Quest. Edan (Portnoy) hails from Maryland, where his parents emigrated from Israel. He learned to play piano and guitar early on, inspired by the Beatles and Jimi Hendrix.

"I still incorporate all that into my records," Edan says. "People think so separately when they get into categories. We're really just children from the same beast."

THE BRETT ROSENBERG PROBLEM

A strong showing in the WBCN Rock & Roll Rumble usually helps a band. For the Brett Rosenberg Problem, which made the 2004 final as a wild card playing power-pop in the vein of early Elvis Costello or Graham Parker, it nearly broke up the band.

"The Rumble is all about pacing and professionalism and trying to appear relevant to the crowd, to psych people up, and that's not really my thing," explains Rosenberg, who says his music doesn't really fit with the sounds he hears nowadays. "The strange thing was realizing how irrelevant the music I make is. Maybe five years ago, we'd have been a cool throwback.

"Once it was over, we didn't know what direction the band was going in, and we had a rehearsal for what was touted as the last Problem show." Fortunately, Rosenberg reignited the spark with some new songs. "It was like a great weight had lifted," he says.

Rosenberg already modified his sound on Shocktwins, his fourth CD, made up of lo-fi demos. And his wham-bang follow-up with fellow upstate–New York transplants Jason Sloan (drums) and Geoff Van Duyne (bass) is shaping up as another departure.

"It's like a cross between Crazy Horse and the Knack," he says. "The lyrics are raw and personal, like on Shocktwins, but the sound is very rock and roll and dangerous."

The Brett Rosenberg Problem plays T.T. the Bear's September 23 and Harpers Ferry October 22.

THE LOT SIX

The Lot Six's sound explodes with a volatility and restlessness that extends beyond the band's roots in hardcore punk. "We're just evolving and changing a lot," says singer Dave Vicini, "from record to record, and even from show to show."

What hasn't changed over five years is a dedication to raw, sprawling rock. It's evident on the group's last CD, Major Fables (despite the Stones-like ballad "My Baby's Gone"), and in its live shows, where Vicini leans into his harangues with a pretty-vacant stare and literally falls about the stage.

"That's like a release," he says. "Some shows are crazier than others, but that's the time to express yourself, to get a lot of shit out through the music."

The Lot Six barely even lost a step in 2002 when Vicini underwent heart surgery for a congenital condition before recording the raw-sounding Major Fables. "I was out not even three months," he says. "I pretty much dove back into it."

The hard-touring band just recorded an EP, and recent shows have focused on the quintet's biting two-guitar attack. "Our keyboard broke and we can't afford a new one," says Vicini.

"We're all poor, broke and don't really have any homes, but it's really like there's n other way," he says. "We don't have a backup plan."

The Lot Six plays T.T. the Bear's September 24.

THE BENDERS

Singer-guitarist Jabe Beyer travels in multiple directions. His roots-rock band Jabe mac the semifinals of the 2004 WBCN Rock & Roll Rumble, and lately he's been performir solo and with Cold River, a combo that includes saxman Dana Colley and drumm Billy Beard. But Beyer's most striking outlet is the Benders, a bluegrass-styled quintet h co-leads with Vermont banjo player Bow Thayer.

"I tend to write for whom I'm playing with, so if I hear [a place for] a banjo, it's got be a Benders song," says Beyer, who joins mandolinist Sean Staples and dobro play Tim Kelly in maintaining Boston residency (new bassist Jay Aucella lives in Maine).

The group has kept busy in Vermont and hasn't played Boston for months, but it's ju finishing a Wednesday residency at the Burren in Somerville's Davis Square and plans t self-record its fourth CD this fall.

Although the Benders deliver the pure acoustic sound of a string band, its members started out in rock groups. Beyer says he doesn't really listen to bluegrass.

"In the early bluegrass I've heard," he says, "guys are playing a mile a minute as hard as they can. It's like punk music. We're taking traditional elements like simple songs and three-part harmonies that people associate with bluegrass, but we really try to take it somewhere else."

The Benders play the Burren September 29.

AD FRANK AND THE FAST EASY WOMEN

"The best way to get me to write a song about you is not to return my phone calls," says Ad Frank, the stylish king of the breakup song. "Sadder songs are better, and most of the sadder ones are the ones that needed to be written."

In that sense, Frank wasn't thrilled with In Girl Trouble, his most recent disc with the Fast Easy Women. "I'd like to think you don't have to be screwed up to write a good record," he says, "but I was pretty comfortable when I wrote In Girl Trouble, and I think the record suffered."

So he'll pursue a slightly darker sound on his next CD, which is still likely to reflect influences that include John Cale, David Bowie and the '80s new romantic movement.

"I was in high school when the new romantic thing happened, so it was pretty hard to miss," says Frank, who performs in a suit jacket and shirt sans necktie, "especially since that's what the girls I liked were into."

Through the early '90s, Frank played in the harder pop band Miles Dethmuffen. Now he's built a buzz not only for his group, but also for his cabaret-style solo act on piano and guitar.

"A stopped clock is exactly right twice a day, whereas one that keeps going is never quite exactly right," Frank says. "So I feel like it's finally come back around. After being nerdy and unhip for 15 years, I'm finally sort of with it."

Ad Frank and the Fast Easy Women play Great Scott October 22.

THE INFORMATION

Yes, there's a synthesizer churning within the Information's heavy, aggressive rock. Just don't call their music "synth-rock."

"I think of that as a really lazy way to describe anything," says singer Max Fresen. He describes his band as "New Order meets the Stooges" and claims he's influenced by "proto-punk, like late-'70s New York stuff, more than anything else."

The sextet seems to share influences with popular current New York bands like Interpol, but Fresen says, "We had an opportunity to move to New York earlier this year and chose to stay. The Boston music scene is much more varied."

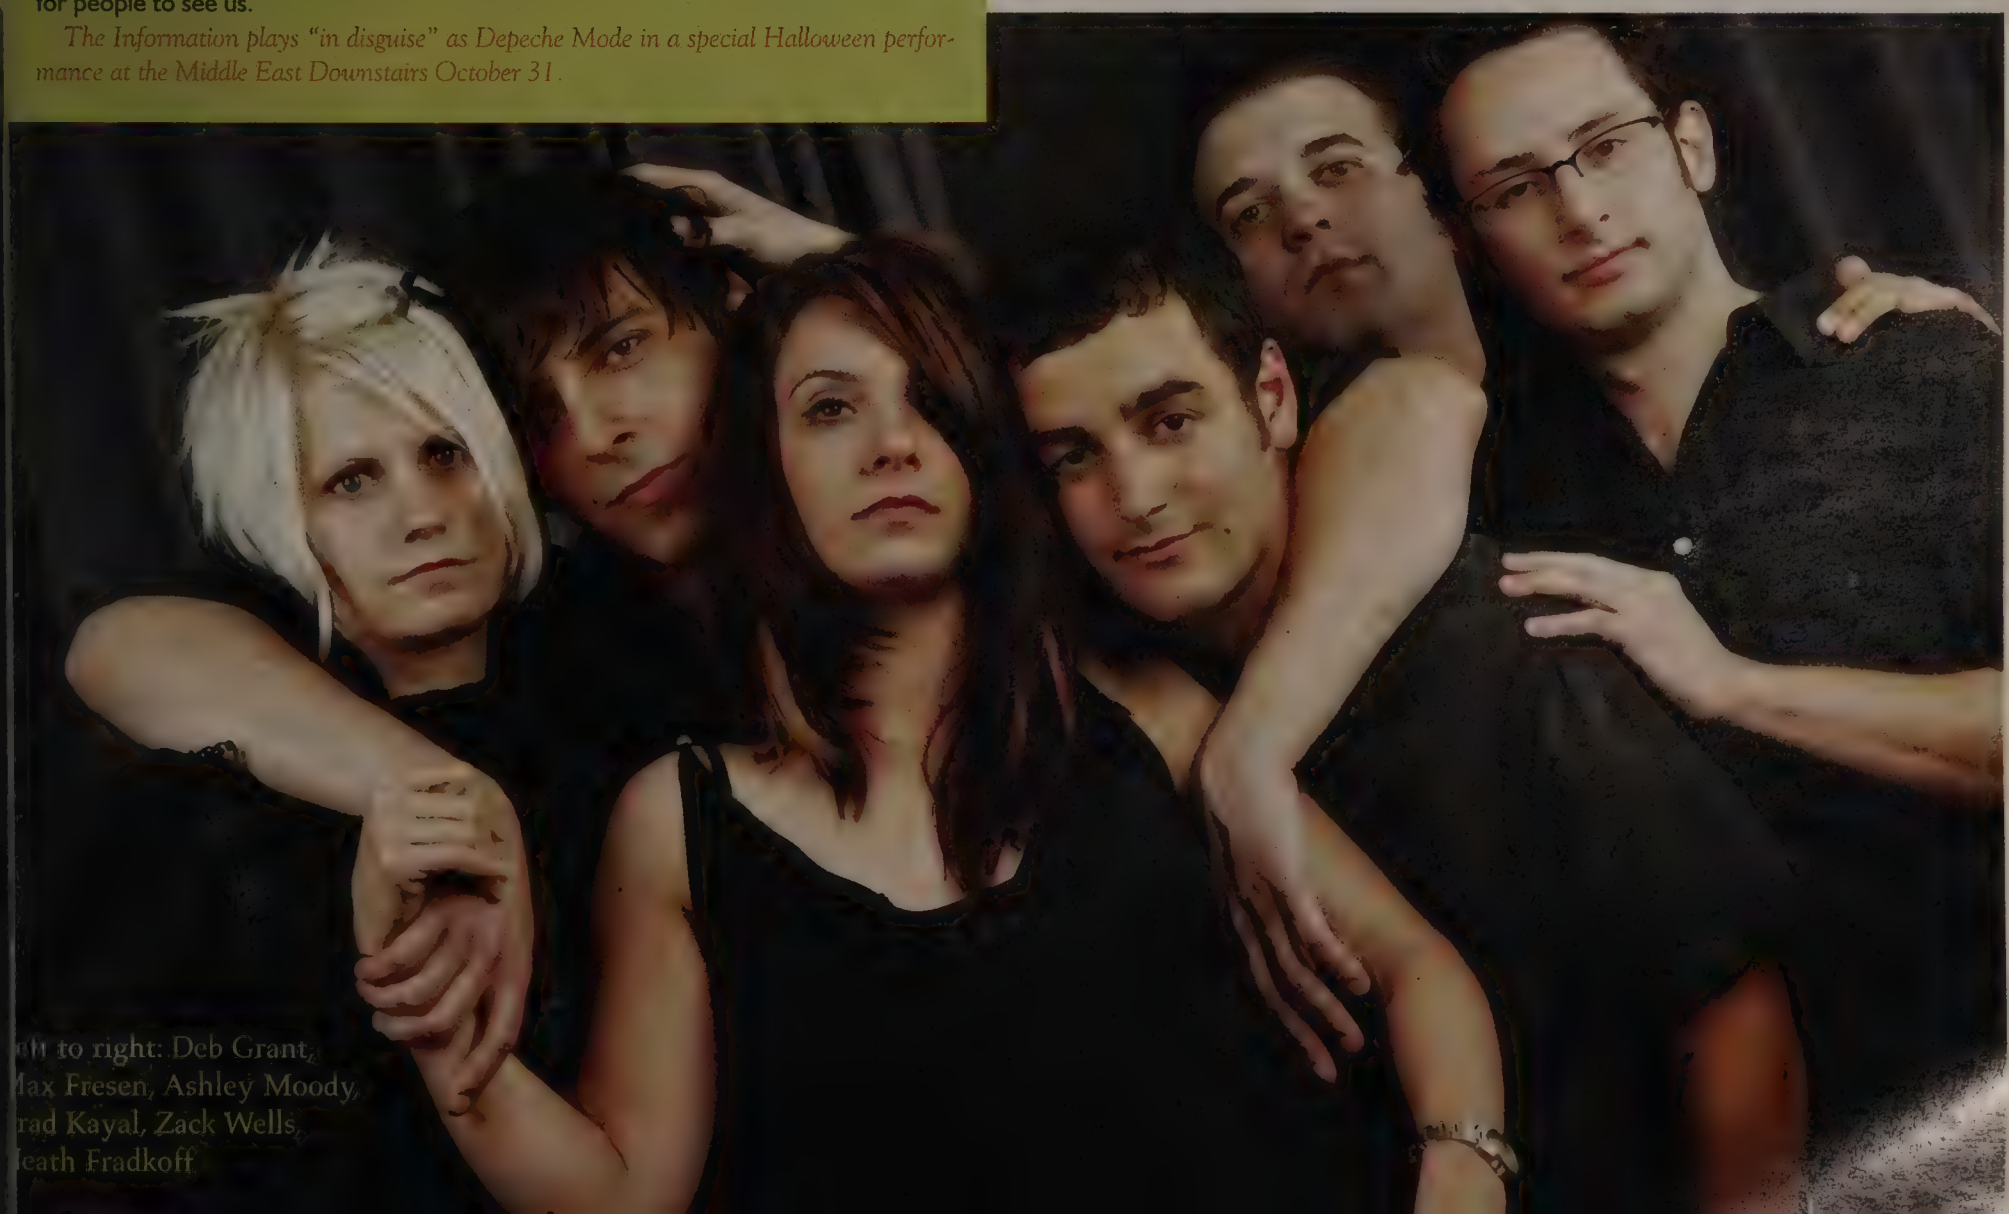
The Boston scene is also more supportive, says the Florida-bred singer, who is an avid booster of fellow bands, even if his stage presence comes off as brooding.

People shouldn't take his stage act personally, Fresen says, as performing is a catharsis for him: "When I psych myself into getting onstage and screaming my diary into a microphone, I'm not consciously thinking of the audience."

And even though guitarists Zack Wells and Deb Grant wield more weight onstage than keyboardist Ashley Moody, Fresen says the band is spending more time on keyboard sections and triggered drums for an upcoming debut album. "We want to make the record sound more lush than our live sound," he says. "I want an additional reason for people to see us."

The Information plays "in disguise" as Depeche Mode in a special Halloween performance at the Middle East Downstairs October 31.

SPOOKIE DALY PRIDE



Spookie Daly Pride's party-hearty cross of funk jam, reggae glide and Dixieland stomp isn't your usual rock club fare.

"The shows are very loose," says keyboardist Terence "Spookie" Daly, whose three-year-old band is popular on the college circuit and with the jam-band crowd, playing 150 to 170 shows per year. "We don't use a set list. I call out songs, so it keeps things [loose], and we definitely stretch sections out."

Daly's raspy vocals evoke Dr. John, Tom Waits and Randy Newman, although he cites jazz singer Louis Prima as his main influence. "We're really trying to find something unique that people haven't heard before, but at the same time that's not so esoteric that people can't grasp it," he says. "We want people to have a joyful experience."

That's a given with the playful kick of the band's studio CD, Marshmallow Pie, as well as gigs that find Daly bouncing at his piano like a crazy man, backed by guitarist Pete Witham, drummer Tommy Diehl and new bassist Floyd Kellogg. "We get compared to the Muppets more than any other band when we play live," says the Billerica native, who grew up listening to Run-DMC, the Beatles and AM radio and landed the nickname Spookie because he held a job in a funeral home. "Maybe I watched too much of the Muppets when I was a little kid."

Spookie Daly Pride plays Harpers Ferry November 6.

THE SO AND SO'S

Meghan Toohey remembers her first attempt to cross into rock, when she was known on the folk circuit as a singer-songwriter who played guitar with Lori McKenna and Deb Talen. "It kind of went over like a fart in church," she says. "It was really hard to get out of that mold."

Things took a turn for the better when she put aside her solo career for a musical partnership as frontwoman of the So and So's, a quartet whose dark, atmospheric rock displays the influence of Chrissie Hynde and PJ Harvey.

"I'm digging into different styles," says Toohey. "But it's very easy to write about tumultuous relationships. It's a never-ending source of material."

Not that the move was easy for old fans. "A lot of people didn't want me to be playing with loud guitars in smoky rock clubs," she says, "but suddenly something switched, and they came back around."

The turning point was the release of Give Me Drama, a disc that proved Toohey's change of identity had paid off. She still wrote about relationship troubles, but guitarist Jay Barclay, bassist Rodrigo Monterrey and drummer Chris Hobbick put new colors and drive behind her songs.

Compared with performing solo, Toohey says, "you're more vulnerable as a band. If you're up there with your acoustic guitar, people are listening intently. With a band, you really have to capture people's attention because there's so much going on. For starters, there's a bar."

BOSTON VENUES REVITALIZE THEIR LIVE OFFERINGS.

Rock fans who follow Boston's live-music scene know that the ground is always shifting. Although in recent years, Cambridge's Central Square has been the stronghold for independent music and up-and-coming local bands, some Boston venues are making efforts to rekindle the excitement of the storied days of the Rat and the Channel.

Perhaps the most radical change has taken place at Great Scott. This Allston spot, long a favorite of the collegiate baseball-capped crowd, has recently begun booking nightly rock shows. For a more-than-fair $7 cover, fans can check out local favorites as well as some touring bands. Upcoming big shows include the noise-pop duo New Radiant Storm King October 1, Minneapolis' Magnolia Electric Co. on the 5th, and Read Yellow on the 10th.

Just a bit down Harvard Avenue from Great Scott, O'Brien's, a longtime Allston rock mainstay, has revitalized its music programming. Shred, local music director of WBCN, recently took over the booking and plans to bring the buzz back to the club, which has had a lower profile in recent years after being a center for rock in the neighborhood for much of the 1990s. Upcoming shows there include an October 30 Halloween-themed show with tribute bands Lucifuge (playing Danzig) and the Whoors (the Doors), and a December 5 show with Adolf Satan, featuring ex-members of infamous Boston noise-core legends A.C.

For the past six years, the Milky Way has been an outpost for underground rock in Jamaica Plain with live music on weekends. This fall, it introduced "Live Band Karaoke" on the first and third (and fifth) Tuesday of each month. Rather than singing along with a backing track, audience members can get on stage and belt out a tune with the Nickel & Dime Band. The group's ever-growing repertoire (currently about 120 songs) includes a range of good-time tunes from R&B classics (Al Green, Prince) to new wave–era favorites (Dexys Midnight Runners, Devo) and contemporary hits by the Darkness and Outkast.

As always, new things are happening across the Charles, in Cambridge and Somerville. The All Asia Café, on Mass. Ave. near MIT, is hoping to draw a crowd looking for quieter, though still edgy, live music. Booker Marc Shulman says the crowds and the volume generated by the punk, metal and rap shows the club previously hosted were too much for the small room. Now, All Asia presents an acoustic showcase on Sunday nights. On Saturday nights, live bands play "neo-soul." Weeknights include a noise/ambient night (Shulman describes the music as "offstream") on Mondays, a comedy-music showcase Tuesdays and a singer-songwriter night on Wednesdays.

Somerville's P.A.'s Lounge, a Union Square club with a vintage VFW-hall look, has been a bit of a "buzz" spot since it began booking live music about two years ago. Early efforts were half-hearted, with bands essentially renting the space and running their own shows. But Tony Confalone, who took over booking in February, is trying to forge a stronger identity. Musical styles will vary, but he says he wants to book experimental rock and more melodic, "English-flavored" bands. A new night, Number 6, is booked by Dan Shea, who ran the recently closed, unlicensed venue House of Suffering Succotash in Brighton. It takes place the first Saturday of every month and will feature live bands as well as DJs. Some of P.A.'s bigger upcoming shows include U.K. singer-songwriter Mat Wilson September 30 and Washington, D.C., art-punks Measles Mumps Rubella October 29.

RUNNER AND THE THERMODYNAMICS

A great drummer can truly set a band apart, or, in the case of Runner and the Thermodynamics, break it apart as well—whether you're talking about straight time-keeping and song structure, or the drum kit itself. "We just get carried away," says singer-guitarist Matt Pinansky of his dynamic foil Roger Knight, whose manic flailing evokes the Who's Keith Moon. "Drums aren't made for the way he plays drums."

Indeed, drums slide and cymbal stands topple, yet Knight maintains control. "He can be following any part of the music at any moment," says Pinansky. "I can't see him because I'm facing the crowd, but I can tell he's doing something crazy by people's reaction."

Reaction to the band in general has been heated since Pinansky and Knight joined forces in 2000, unafraid to embrace classic rock. "That's what I grew up with anyway, so I use those songs as inspiration," says Pinansky, who puts early-'70s Grand Funk as high on his list as the Who and Led Zeppelin. "When I write, I focus on melody, energy and a good riff that will stick in your head."

The power trio didn't lose a step when bassist Mike Orr left to focus on guitar. Jim Zavadoski from the Damn Personals jumped in with a more grounded bass approach. "It's a different but logical progression," Pinansky says. "The songs feel a lot more natural."

As for the band's moniker, Runner was Pinansky's name for a solo project, and he added the Thermodynamics when it grew into a band. "There's a lot of heat and energy," he says. "So it made sense."

TWO LEGENDARY BOSTON GROUPS RETURN ON THEIR OWN TERMS

THE PIXIES

few years ago, no one could have expected either the Pixies or Mission of Burma—two of the most innovative, influential rock bands to emerge from Boston in the 1980s, or in any decade for that matter—to perform again.

The Pixies imploded in 1992 after personalities clashed as hard as the quartet's schizoid collage of punk, pop, metal and surf rock (which Kurt Cobain credited for influencing his group Nirvana's own loud-soft dynamics). Mission of Burma disbanded in 1983 because of guitarist Roger Miller's ringing ears, but its chaotic avant-punk inspired rockers from the Pixies to Morphine (who had a minor hit with a cover of Burma's "That's When I Reach for My Revolver"). Members of Burma and the Pixies moved on to other projects, families and jobs, and there were no signs either group would ever get back together.

But that's what has happened. And both bands are receiving a much bigger response than during their heyday, in part due to mythical reputations that grew in absentia.

First came Burma's reformation, which kicked off with a few 2002 club shows (for which audiences had grown tenfold over those of the early '80s) and has led to the critically acclaimed new album ONoffON. "It's quite unbelievable on a lot of levels for us," says bassist Clint Conley, 48. "It's one thing to be coasting on what you did 20 years ago, but to step up to the line and put it down again was a big gamble."

Then, this past spring, the Pixies regrouped to tour sold-out theaters and arenas throughout Europe and North America, practically upstaging Radiohead at California's Coachella Festival along the way.

"We knew there would be some reaction, obviously," says Pixies frontman Frank Black, whose band finally launches its New England homecoming with shows November 30 at the Mullins Center in Amherst (on the campus of Black's U-Mass alma mater) and December 1 and 2 at Tsongas Arena in Lowell, all with Mission of Burma opening. "It probably does exceed expectations.

"I'm real bad with the envisioning thing," says Black, 39. "I found out a couple years ago that my sign in the Chinese zodiac is the snake. The snake kind of feels his way. He doesn't look too far down the path."

Twelve years ago, his bandmates might have envisioned him as a bit of a snake when he broke up the Pixies by fax. "I was grouchy," says Black, who previously used the moniker Black Francis and whose real name is Charles Thompson. "It had nothing to do with the music. It was all personal."

A new path opened last year when the singer-guitarist was doing a radio interview in London and playfully dropped the untrue bombshell that the Pixies had been jamming together. "It got out of hand, and suddenly everyone thought we were reuniting," says Black, "and it was OK, maybe." He called Joey Santiago, the Pixies' lead guitarist, and Santiago broached the concept with bassist-singer Kim Deal and drummer David Lovering.

The four musicians (or magician in the case of career-changer Lovering) met for the first time since 1992 at an industrial rehearsal space outside Los Angeles. "They're dank cement places, and there was a lot of that in Boston," Black says. "It was humble and replicated our original rehearsals.

"It was pleasantly uneventful and felt like only two years had passed, not 12," adds Black, who hadn't spoken with Deal for even longer. "People are more mature. When you're 23 years old, you're kind of an arrogant shithead."

In the late '80s, it didn't take long for the Pixies to get beyond dank rehearsal spaces and early gigs at now-defunct Boston-area clubs like Jack's and the Rat. Signed to the English label 4AD, the band quickly became cult stars in Britain. And while the Pixies never rose above the "college rock" circuit in America, songs like "Monkey Gone to Heaven," "Debaser" and "Here Comes Your Man" received some airplay. Among the band's famous fans (whose praise is documented on an extensive new Pixies DVD) were U2, David Bowie, Radiohead and PJ Harvey. U2 even invited the quartet to open part of its "Zoo TV" tour in 1992.

The first two of the Pixies' four albums, Surfer Rosa (1988) and Doolittle (1989), were landmarks for alternative rock, juxtaposing Black's speaking-in-tongues babble and screamed choruses with Deal's pulsing bass and airy backup vocals, Lovering's booming beats and Santiago's skittering notes.

"It's kind of surrealist, cut up so it doesn't even matter if you speak English," Black says of his splattering of biblical and sci-fi imagery and even Spanish vocals. "You don't have to be coming from a particular subculture. You don't have to be a punk, a nerd, an arty person or a hard-rock person. You can be any of those. But [the music] is easy to latch onto."

The next step for the Pixies may be a new studio disc (the band sold live soundboard recordings at its shows earlier this year and hopes to do the same on its upcoming tour). Primary songwriter Black says he plans to write new tunes, and Deal already provided one in "Bam Thwok," which the band recorded for Shrek 2. But that song turned into an iTunes download after it was rejected for the movie in favor of a Counting Crows track.

"It was classic, like being right back in 1989," Black says, mimicking the producers' reaction: "Oh, the mix is a little bit adventurous for us. Could you tone it down? Oh, actually we're going to use this really bland band anyway."

Mission of Burma had better luck placing a snatch of vintage track "Trem Two" in The Manchurian Candidate. "It's during a shock therapy session," Miller says. "'Trem Two' is a very subconscious song." Even more exciting for the band, though, were glowing reviews for ONoffON, and a first tour of Europe.

"I couldn't believe people in Paris and Amsterdam would come to see Mission of Burma," Conley says. "In out-of-the-way places like Birmingham, England, where 50 people showed up, it was a relatively small crowd, but it blew my mind."

In America, the band has filled ballrooms like Avalon, New York's Irving Plaza and San Francisco's Fillmore, although, Conley says, "there has been a falloff in attendance at our shows the second time around the track, now that this once-in-a-lifetime occurrence shows no sign of going away."

From the get-go, however, members threw new songs into the ring. ("Like a tortoise or tree, once it stops growing, it dies," Miller says.) And the resultant ONoffON has fueled the buzz, garnering the same kind of praise awarded the Pixies reunion, with rave reviews in Rolling Stone, Blender and Spin and a prominent feature in the Sunday New York Times.

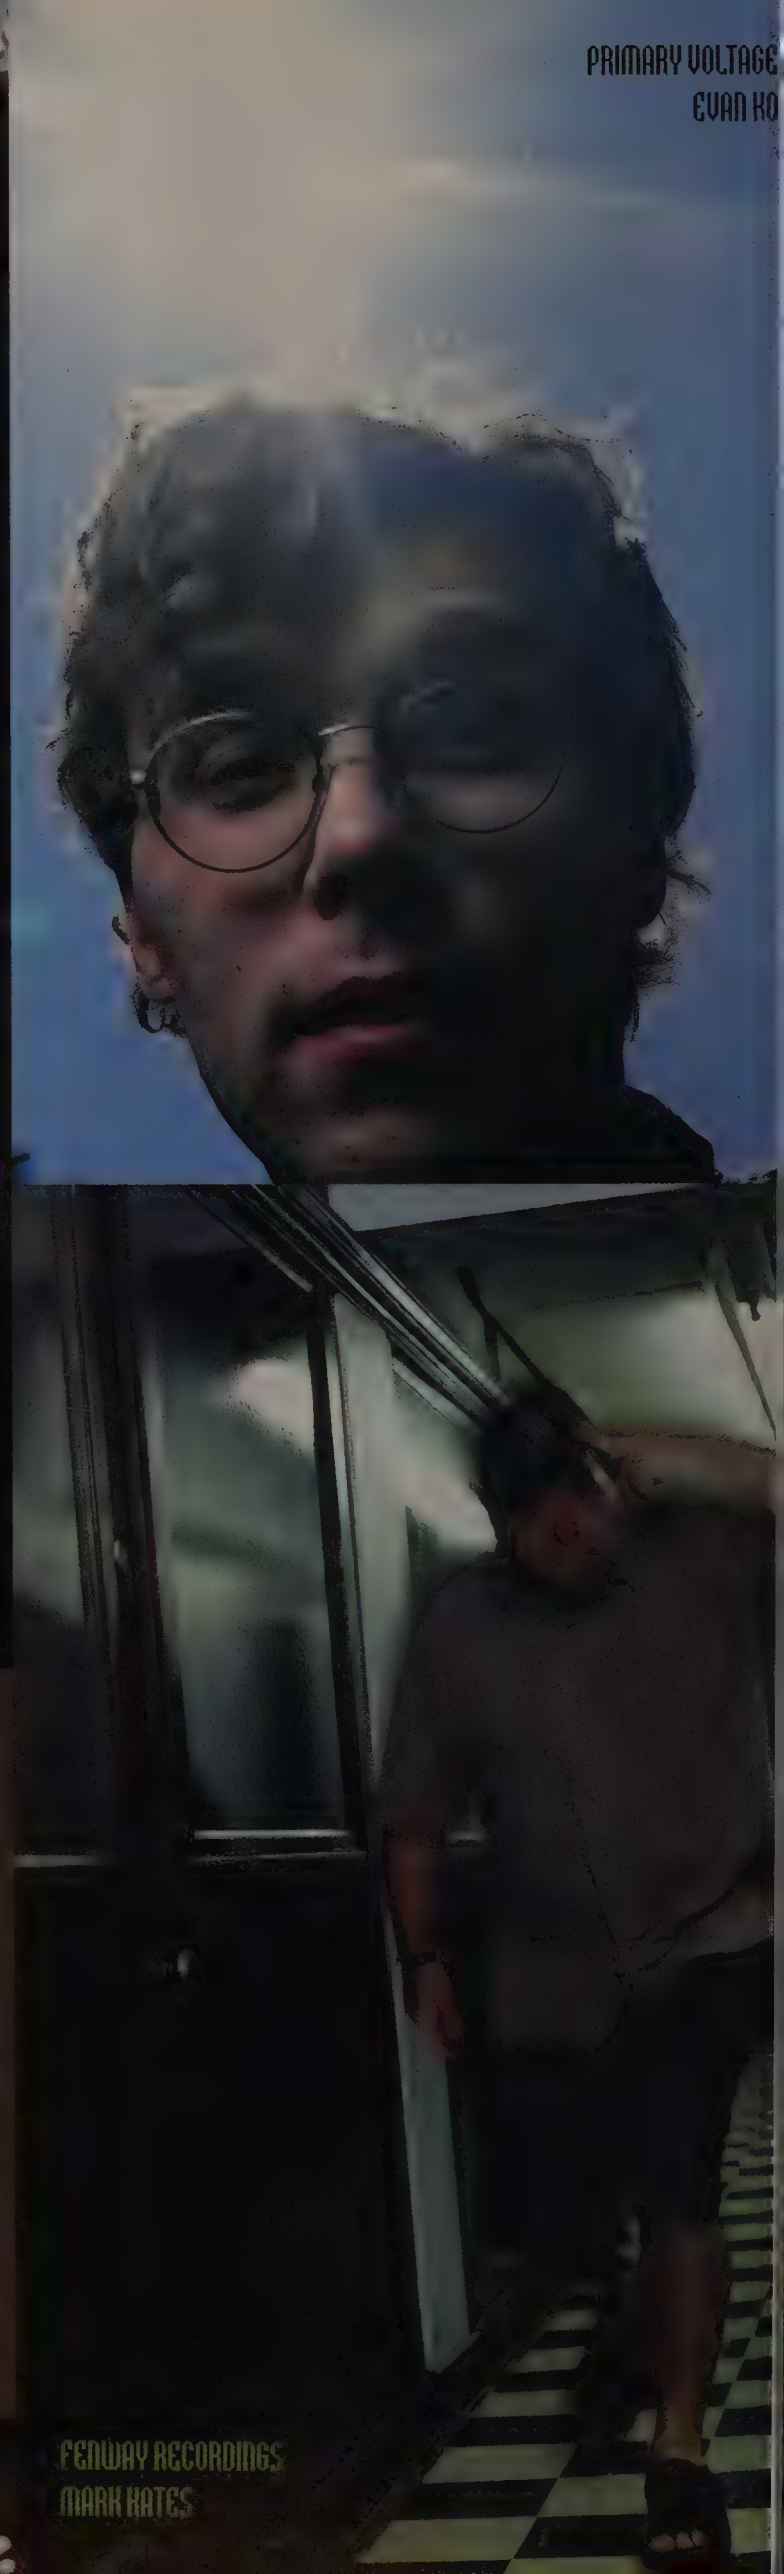
The tunefully discordant mash of Conley's melodic bass, Miller's knotty guitar, and drummer Peter Prescott's riptide rhythms (with Bob Weston replacing Martin Swope on tape loops) has only tightened in contrast to Burma's sole previous studio album, Vs. (1982). All three principals trade incisive writing and vocals on ONoffON, and the band even breaks the mold with Conley's contemplative "Prepared" and cow-punky "Nicotine Bomb."

"On Vs.," Miller says, "three-part harmony was three people yelling at the same time, and on ONoffON, there's three-part harmony and we're singing three different specific pitches, which is a huge difference. To me, that's amazing."

No matter how it's cut, Burma retains an individual sound, with roots in the Ramones, Wire, Brian Eno, Syd Barrett–era Pink Floyd, the Velvet Underground and free jazz. "Whatever the avant-garde tendencies, at the core of all the songs, we rock like the Stooges," says Miller, 52, who tempers the damage to his ears with headphones and earplugs. "Then you can put anything else on top of it, which makes it unusual, but it's also problematic. That's why we'll never be big."

Not that limitations concern them. "I don't think any of us want to run away to join the circus and become a full-time rock band again," says Conley, who now works as a producer for WCVB-TV's Chronicle. "I imagine we'll fall back into playing out less and picking our spots." iB

Cradle of Independents



BOSTON LABELS GO NATIONWIDE

BY J. BENNETT

There was a time, maybe 20 or so years ago, when a Boston band looking to "make it" on a national level might find themselves in New York or Los Angeles sitting across from a stuffed shirt who would spell out the band's limited options for them in no uncertain terms. And that's assuming the band in question was good — or fortunate — enough to get a meeting in the first place. The idea of that same band (let's call them Tom Scholz's Space-Age Fantasy) putting out a record on an independent, Boston-area label, touring nationally and overseas, garnering national and international press recognition, and actually seeing their records in the stores along the way was pretty much unthinkable.

That's not the case in 2004. Despite a mass exodus of Boston independents a few years ago (Big Wheel Recreation, Hydra Head Records and Tortuga Recordings all pulled up stakes for Los Angeles in 2001–02), the city's record labels are thriving, and the bands on those labels — no longer exclusively from New England, by the way — are right there with them. Today, even if Tom Scholz's Space-Age Fantasy happened to be from Australia, they just might send their demos to Boston before having a go at the stuffed shirts.

Just ask Mark Kates, founder of Fenway Recordings (the offices of which are located just outside Porter Square in Cambridge). A Lexington native who moved to Los Angeles to work in the music industry, Kates was an A&R executive at Geffen before becoming president of the Beastie Boys' Grand Royal Records in 1998. When Grand Royal shut down in 2001, Kates moved back to Boston and started his own label. After releasing an EP from NYC critics' darlings Longwave (who went on to sign a deal with RCA), Kates put out records by IMPROPER cover stars Read Yellow, indie supergroup Consonant (featuring Mission of Burma bassist/vocalist Clint Conley) and recent Australian imports Gerling.

"I'm really not interested in being about Boston artists," Kates says. "I just wanna live here. I could never do all the great stuff that there is in Boston, anyway." For Kates, it's about bringing a trained ear to the city he loves. "The eyes of the music business are on everything that goes on in L.A., and it still doesn't really matter. There's never been enough of that [attention] here, and that's one of the reasons I wanted to do this."

In many ways, Read Yellow embodies the label's success. Says Kates, "It's pretty amazing to have gone from seeing them at O'Brien's to playing Reading [a massive annual outdoor festival] in England, going on tour with TV on the Radio and Mooney Suzuki, going to Europe. That's substantial stuff that not everyone in their world has the opportunity to do."

The artists on Fenway's roster benefit from Kates' invaluable industry experience, as well as his vast network of connections. For Read Yellow, that meant working with producer Paul Kolderie (Warren Zevon, Radiohead) and making, as Kates says, "a real record in a real studio, whereas a lot of bands like them wouldn't necessarily [have the chance to] do that."

As a member of a Boston punk icons Mission of Burma, Clint Conley had various potential labels at his disposal when his new band, Consonant, was ready to record. "Clint definitely had options," Kates confirms, "and bigger ones than us." For Conley, Fenway's appeal stemmed from a long personal relationship with Kates, whose first job in the music business was with Ace of Hearts Records, Burma's label in the early '80s. "Mark is very capable and accomplished, so I had the utmost confidence in him." Conley says. "I also know where Fenway is, so I can go in and bang my shoe on his desk—which, needless to say, has never happened." Of course, the contacts Kates has accumulated since his Ace of Hearts days don't hurt, either. "Mark is hooked into all the top people in the business," Conley points out, "whether it's on the distribution end, the promotion end. The publicists are the same people who do the Strokes and Wilco; the distributor is ADA, one of the biggest. They take Mark's phone calls and extend their services to his small label because of who he is. And they might not do that for Joe Blow from Somerville Records."

That's not to say that Joe Blow from Somerville Records can't figure it out for himself.

Evan Koch, founder of Primary Voltage Records, runs what's essentially a one-man operation out of his living room, about a mile from Davis Square. A former financial consultant to electric and utility clients (hence his label's moniker), Koch started Primary Voltage in 2002 and has released albums from a stable of local hipsters like the Good North, Baby Strange and the Charms.

Running a label is a hands-on, do-it-yourself experience for Koch. "Say you've gotta get the CDs out to radio or get articles in the newspaper," he posits. "Here's a phone; here's a computer—make it happen. Don't worry about the technical aspects of how you're supposed to do it. Just make the phone calls and get people interested. There's nothing too complicated about that." And Koch has done nothing if not generate interest in the PV roster: the Charms were recently featured on MTV's Underground a-Go-Go documentary, and the Good North and the Information (who've recorded an upcoming CD for Primary Voltage) have both played in WBCN's Rock & Roll Rumble.

For a guy with limited resources and no previous music industry experience, Koch is running a remarkably tight ship. "I think the reason major labels had such an important place in the market 20 years ago is because the advantages they had were huge," he says. "A lot of them were purely economic—in terms of cost and production—but that's almost completely disappeared. They also had a lot of muscle in terms of getting product on the shelves. In the age of the Internet, when you can point and click your way to any CD you want, there's really no reason why a bedroom operation can't sell a million CDs a year if you play your cards right."

To facilitate that goal, Primary Voltage's artists actually make it out of New England once in a while, unlike many Boston bands that have no aspirations beyond the occasional gig in Portland. "It's important to show that the popularity they've got going here in Boston is for real," Koch explains. "Playing the Middle East Upstairs to 150 people is great, but you've got to show that it's more than a Boston thing—that it can work anywhere."

Says Good North vocalist Luke O'Neil, "When you think of a local label, you think of your friends who wanna pretend like they're a label so they can get chicks. But Evan is a straight-up business dude who happens to love music and knows his shit. We're the first band he signed, and none of us really knew what we were doing at the time, but now all his bands end up on the CMJ [College Music Journal] charts, and he's awesome with press and promo stuff. Whenever we play out of town, there's always an article in the local paper. He's definitely got his eye on the prize, which is cool, because we do too."

At Tarantulas Records, there's a prize in every package. In addition to having a unique (for an indie, anyway), bicoastal business model, they like to give away free stuff. Buy a Tarantulas release at a show and you get a handful of stickers, buttons and other schwag emblazoned with the names on the label's impressive roster. The Boston-based, L.A.-run label was founded by the members of Boston punk cadre (and Virgin Records artists) the Explosion—and besides being a vehicle for two Explosion EPs, Tarantulas has released music by L.A. youngbloods the Bronx (who went on to sign with Island/Def Jam), the Distillers (the vinyl edition of the band's Warner Brothers CD, Coral Fang), and local superstars the Lot Six and the Faux.

Tarantulas' decidedly art- and artist-friendly take on label aesthetics is influenced by the Tarantulas bands themselves, and the fact that the label is run by one of them. As Explosion bassist and Tarantulas creative director Damian Genuardi explains, "One of the advantages [is that] we know what it's like to be a band and want certain things. So the bands we sign become part of a collective—we can turn to the Distillers, introduce them to the Lot Six, and then they go on tour together, and now they're really tight."

Big Wheel Recreation founder/Explosion manager/ex-Boston resident Rama Mayo helps guide Tarantulas' day-to-day operations from his office in Los Angeles. "Tarantulas is very much a collaborative effort," Mayo explains. "Every member of the Explosion is an A&R guy for Tarantulas. I guess 'art and commerce' is what we do—we work with bands that are artists, not just guitarists and bass players and drummers. So we do whatever they need us to do."

"I've lived in Boston for eight years," Genuardi says. "But when you're touring, your world becomes smaller; you have friends everywhere. In our world, our lifestyle, [working] with people from all over the place is a pretty natural thing for someone in a band."

BOSTON YOU'RE MY HOME

The following are some other Boston-area labels making noise

Brick Records

Brick's first seven-inch, released in 1996, was financed with student-loan money by the label's co-founder Josh Gagne, who goes by the name Truth Elemental. Since that time, Brick has become one of the most respected underground hip-hop labels in the nation. Its current roster includes MCs and crews such as Main Flow, Beyonder, D-Tension and Insight, and Brick's back catalog contains 12-inch singles and full-lengths from such Boston luminaries as Mr. Lif, 7L & Esoteric and Skitzofreniks.

Bridge Nine

Founded in 1996 by Connecticut transplant Chris Wrenn, Bridge Nine has released discs by hardcore heavyweights like Sick of It All, No Warning, Slapshot and the now-defunct Give Up the Ghost (formerly American Nightmare). Originally part of the Initech conglomerate—sharing office space with ex-Boston labels Hydra Head, Tortuga, Big Wheel Recreation and Doghouse—the label, now based in Salem, may or may not be subsidized in part by one of Wrenn's many sidelines, among the most popular of which is a line of "Yankees Suck" T-shirts and bumper stickers. (One of Bridge Nine's early releases was funded in part by a $500 prize Wrenn received for winning a fistfight in a Mission Hill parking lot.)

Deathwish Inc.

Established in 2001 by Tre McCarthy and Jake Bannon, Deathwish focuses mostly on the metallic hardcore strain—most notably NYC veterans Most Precious Blood, hardcore dream-team Some Girls (featuring members of San Diego art-grinders the Locust and Boston's Give Up the Ghost), and singer Bannon's own outfit, Converge. McCarthy and Bannon recently started a sister label, Icarus, to release music by artists that don't quite fit the Deathwish aesthetic, like Swedish dirge architects Switchblade and gothic country troupe Halfacre Gunroom. Both labels share office space in Salem with Bridge Nine.

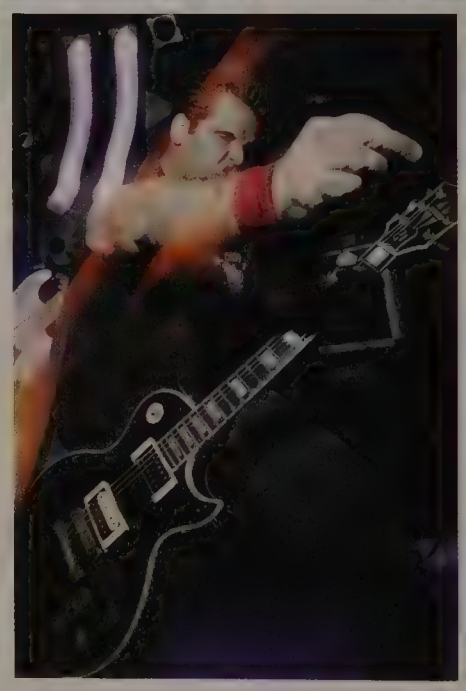
Espo Records

Owned and operated by WBCN local-music DJ and Middle East Club booking agent Shred, Espo specializes in local indie rock. The Allston label's catalog includes releases by Garrison, Moment and Reach the Sky, and its current roster includes the Lot Six, the Warren Commission, and Rose of Sharon.

Lonesome Recordings

Run by Ten Pin Management guru/Blackout Bar DJ/scene-fixture Mark Vieira, Favorite Atomic Hero bassist Xavier Birkenhead, and Josh Smith, Lonesome Recordings release its first album, Favorite Atomic Hero's Who Will Save You Now?, in 2002. Since then, the label has branched out to release music by local faves Elgin James, Quick Fix and Frank Smith (Lot Six drummer Aaron Sinclair's solo project)—not to mention a split-label venture with Fenway Recordings in 2003 on Read Yellow's self-titled debut EP.

Rounder Records



Founded in 1970 by Ken Irwin, Bill Nowlin and Marian Leighton-Levy, Cambridge-based Rounder Records is the granddaddy of local independents—the ultimate exception to the long-standing rule of musically xenophobic local labels. A veritable empire in its own right, Rounder boasts a catalog of more than 3,000 titles in genres ranging from bluegrass and country to Celtic and Cajun. Their world-class roster and catalog includes such internationally renowned artists as Juliana Hatfield, Jelly Roll Morton and Cowboy Junkies.

COVERING THEIR TRACKS

THEY MAY LACK STREET CRED, BUT TRIBUTE BANDS PACK CLUBS AND GIVE FANS AN UP-CLOSE EXPERIENCE THEY CAN'T GET FROM THE SUPERSTARS

Beefy DC offers a heavy take on AC/DC's power-chord rock. Below: Beefy DC guitarist Milk 'Em Young shoots to thrill.

BY EZRA DYER

Unless you live in a hut high in the mountains of Bhutan, you've likely seen an Elvis impersonator at one time or another. And while the King has spawned legions of devoted imitators, many less iconic musical acts have inspired their own tributes. New England is home to scores of musical doppelgängers who ape acts from Sade to Sublime and give fans a taste of the original when it's either financially imprudent or impossible to see the real thing.

"It's a dirty little secret among promoters—tributes draw crowds," says Dan Millen, booking agent for Harper's Ferry in Allston. "I think they're definitely becoming more popular, and you see them popping into the A-list clubs more frequently. I think it's mostly because the avenues for exposure for new, developing bands are being more and more corporatized. Radio playlists are very tight, and people are sick of overpaying for the real thing."

Besides the financial advantage of paying $8 to see a tribute band when the real thing can cost $100 or more, sometimes a tribute is the only way to get a live taste of a band that no longer exists. "Sublime is one of those bands that nobody ever got to see live," says Joel Hanks, bassist for Rhode Island–based Sublime tribute Badfish. "And that gives us a big advantage over other tribute bands. The people who actually saw Sublime play are a pretty select group, especially on the East Coast."

"We'll play at a club and have both young college kids and older people who grew up with the music," says Muzz, drummer for the Beatles tribute Beatlejuice. "We think of it like we're hosting a party every weekend. It's a very communal thing with the audience."

Beatlejuice, which is fronted by Brad Delp, lead singer of Boston (a band that itself has spawned tributes), hews closely to the Beatles musically, while avoiding any attempt to resemble the Fab Four visually. "We're there to re-create this music as best as we possibly can," says Muzz. "People want to hear the music they grew up with, not our version of it."

Beefy DC, an AC/DC tribute led by the none-too-slim Ray Neades, takes the same approach at its shows. "One time, Clear Channel called and offered us an obscene amount of money to play a club in Laconia [N.H.]," Neades says. "So we did it, but it was a drag because people expected us to look like them and act like them. We stay true to the original music [though]. I would never in a million years think I could improve on what they've done."

"If you're going to be in a tribute band, you should give people the music as close as you can get it to the real thing—or kitsch it up a bit," says Millen of Harper's Ferry. "Either you have to have one hell of a weird take on the music"—like the band Hair Supply, which plays heavy metal versions of Air Supply songs—"or you play it as close as you can get it."

In the latter camp is Sandra Aran, who convincingly evokes singer Helen Folasade Adu—better known as Sade. Aran is the lead singer of the Sade tribute band Diamond Life, which plays regularly aboard the Odyssey and has appeared in several local jazz festivals. Aran originally auditioned to play keyboards for the band, but guitar player and founder Rino Benenati selected her over 28 other would-be Sades because of her physical and vocal resemblance to the original smooth operator.

"We try to sound exactly like Sade, because that's what people want," says Aran. "I've studied her DVDs, studied her moves for hours. She's very stately. I try to use a little bit of a British accent when I'm singing." Benenati even bought the same guitars Sade's band uses, and Aran's wardrobe is also a faithful re-creation of the singer's.

Neil Byrnes, lead singer of Aerosmith tribute Draw the Line, looks enough like Steven Tyler to draw double takes. "I used to get razzed about it in high school and college," he says. "It got worse as I got older. You get used to it." In 1991, Byrnes decided to take advantage of his famous features by joining an Aerosmith cover band, which became Draw the Line. In the ensuing years, Byrnes and the band have attended too many Aerosmith concerts to count, watched bootleg footage of shows and perfected their performance down to the tiniest mannerism. They know all of Aerosmith's albums by heart and even play material from the days when Aerosmith itself was covering other bands—one of the songs in Draw the Line's repertoire is Fleetwood Mac's "Rattlesnake Shake," r, more accurately, early Aerosmith's version of "Rat-lesnake Shake." The band plays about 200 shows per ear and recently returned from a tour of Puerto Rico nd Mexico.

Draw the Line was never intended to become a per-nanent vacation. "I was looking at it as a stepping-tone," Byrnes says. "I figured I was getting experience, etting to travel, meeting people in the industry. The riginal plan was to do this for a couple years, then have ne band come out with an original album. What we idn't realize is how many people are so passionate bout Aerosmith's music." It turns out that's a common neme among tribute bands—the members form the and on a lark and then find it so successful that it su-ercedes other musical endeavors.

"None of us saw ourselves playing in a tribute band," ays Badfish's Hanks. "We were playing in ska and punk ands, and one day we were sitting at a bar and started alking to the owner about doing a Sublime show. He id do it, and over 300 people showed up. Now we do bout 200 shows per year, and there's no time for out-de projects. That itch is always there, but we made the ecision to make original music a completely different roject."

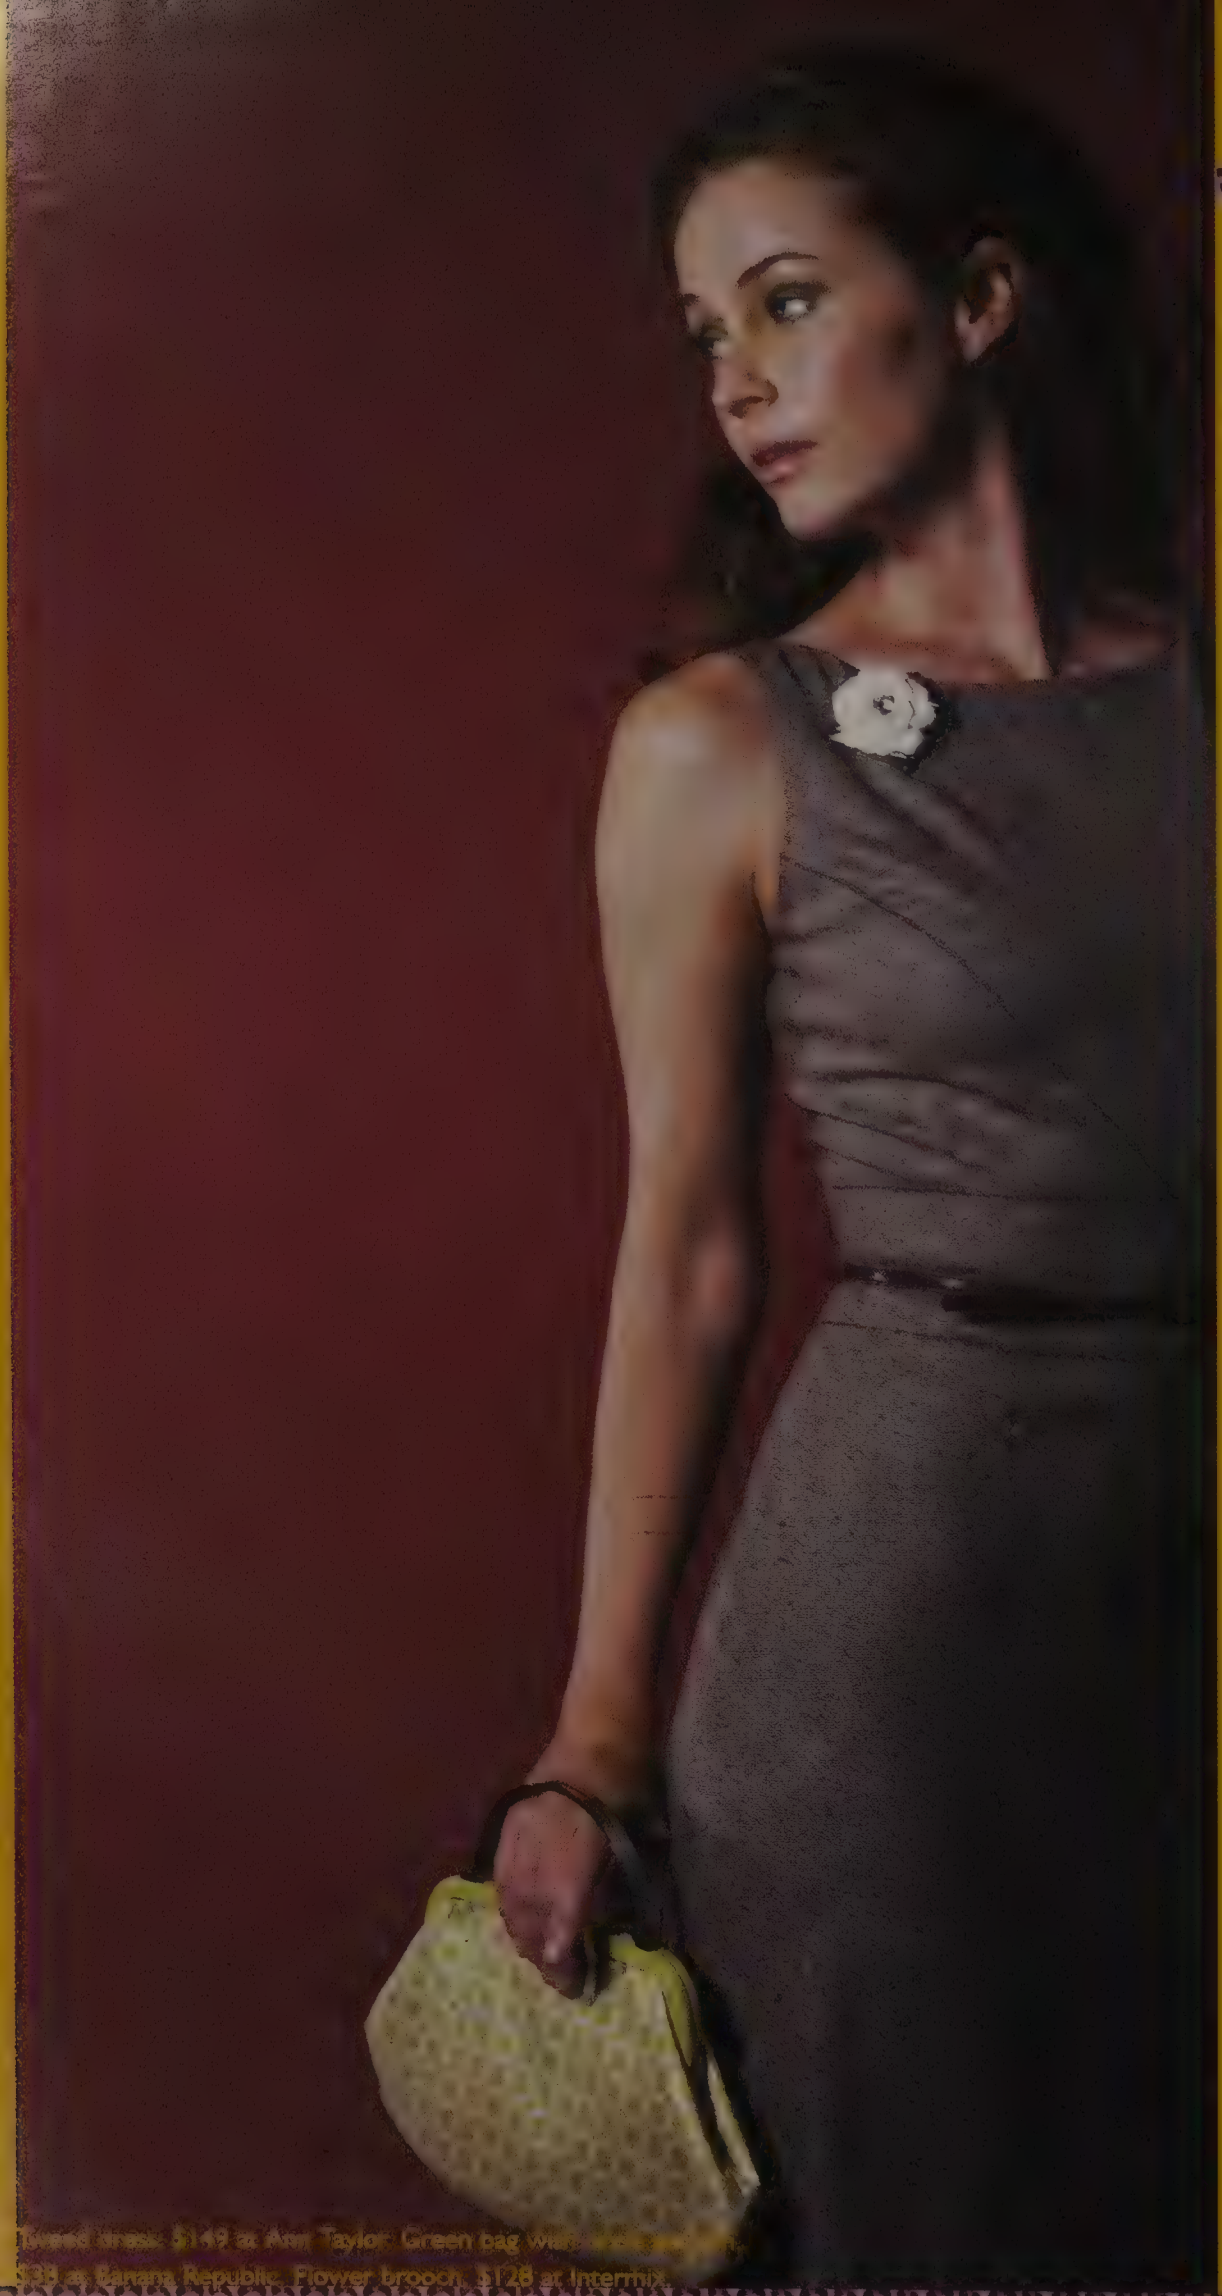
By most accounts, that's a smart move. "I kinda laugh hen I hear guys from tribute bands say, 'Yeah we're just oing this to fund our original stuff, and we'll work that ,'" says Millen. "I've seen a Dave Matthews tribute try at and fail miserably, and a few others as well. Not to esmirch tributes at all, but if you play in a tribute, ou're playing someone else's tunes, and you have to un-erstand that people are not there to hear your stuff, and our fans are not likely to embrace your original stuff. hey're there because they want to howl along to their vorite tunes."

Even if tributes stick to their chosen band's material shows, members often have personal projects on the side. Beefy DC's Neades, who's working on a solo album, says, "We make more money doing this than we do in our original bands. It can feel kind of slimy. One of my friends said, 'Don't worry about it, you're playing music, people like it, you're having fun.' Well, not to get all deep, but sometimes I think this takes away from trying to connect with people with your own music. I'd hate that this would ever become more important to me than writing songs. That would be sad."

Byrnes, on the other hand, argues that playing in a tribute is as viable a way of connecting with music fans as playing one's own material. "When bands get bigger and go national, there's an air of untouchability. They become so disconnected. I have personal relationships with people all over the country. I've had people come up to me after shows and say, 'I was in a real bad funk, and your music helped get me out of that.' That's kept me doing this all these years. That's fulfilling to me. If I wanted to do original music, what am I looking for? More money? More fans? I feel like I'd be taking this for granted."

Byrnes' wife, Tricia, who manages Draw the Line, acknowledges that tribute bands are generally down there with Hanson in terms of public respect. "Even an original band that totally blows and is out of their garage gets more respect than a tribute band, and that makes no sense to me," she says. "The BSO isn't playing original songs, and no one thinks the worse of them."

Then again, Byrnes also notes that anyone making money playing an instrument should consider themselves lucky, something both the casual bands and the constant tourers seem to appreciate.



"In what other life can a bunch of adults get together and do something they love in front of a crowd of people who enjoy it?" says Beatlejuice's Muzz. "There's so much more that we want to get to. It's been 10 or 11 years so far, but we're just getting started." iB

VOICES ON THE BRIDGE

North Shore musician and author Anthony Weller has a new novel, The Siege of Salt Cove.

In Cape Sarah, a thinly disguised variation on the North Shore's Cape Ann, a historical and picturesque wooden bridge is about to be replaced by a concrete monstrosity. Though this might abet the nefarious interests of some politicians, the townspeople in Anthony Weller's rambunctious novel The Siege of Salt Cove don't dig the plan one bit and gather mightily to fight it, even puffing themselves up and threatening secession. Voice after colorful voice tells us the tale of the government's ludicrous Goliath tanks arrayed against the local Davids, and Weller manages to give each of them distinctive colorations, with their own flavors of New England social class. A guy calling himself the Wily Scativo, all impetuous narcissism, plunges headlong into the siege, alas tragically. Two characters, Jessica and Toby, find a bracing affinity. Toby, an ex-lawyer who's half Jessica's age, lives in a lighthouse and works on an arcane cosmology related to pinball machines. Jessica is a spirited, high-toned, literary spinster. Their similarly circuitous and witty way of seeing the world, almost as if they were refugees from the 18th century, and their rumbling, exhilarating way of talking, makes their briefly focused romance both plausible and actually hot.

TRIP THE LIGHT BOAT FANTASTIC.

The cayak, a kayak/canoe hybrid, comes in three styles and sizes, with prices ranging from $995 to $1,295. Call Little Compton, R.I.–based Compass Canoe Company at 888-642-9929, or visit www.compasscanoe.com.

Canoes and kayaks are charming, brotherly rivals of the waterways. But which to choose? The long canoe, stabbing forward into the water is beautiful, but can feel outsized. The tidy kayak, conversely, can feel cramped and claustrophobic. Ah! The compromise boat: the cayak. Though designed for solo paddling like the hermit's cozy kayak, it's longer, in the canoe tradition, which means you can stretch out and bring some stuff, like a fishing rod or binoculars. Forward motivation is accomplished kayak-style, with a double-bladed paddle. Made of fiberglass, with a Kevlar inner skin in some models, a cayak feels as light as the shell of a boat-sized pistachio, and it moves through the water with a grace, ease and speed that will amaze you if you've operated any other boat. The seat is cozily containing, and your feet are pressed with stretchy solidity against foot guards, so the whole kaboodle—back, legs, feet, paddling arms—is enveloped in a wonderful snugness. Cayak inventor Joel Flather, explaining why two people can't fit in a cayak, says, "We are trying to save marriages." The boats weigh only 18 pounds, so that burdensome part of boating—transport—is made lighter and easier.

HIGH ASPIRATIONS

You don't have to check into the Nine Zero hotel to check out its excellent restaurant, Spire.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

Heirloom tomato salad with pine nuts and ricotta

When Spire appeared on the Boston scene more than two years ago, it immediately established itself as a restaurant of distinction. Its chic, high-style decor and refined, creative cuisine attracted patrons despite the unfortunate confluence of its aggressive prices with a struggling Boston economy. Original chef Jeffrey Everts departed Spire earlier this year, but his replacement, Gabriel Frasca, formerly of Aquitaine Bis and Radius, has brought further imagination, flair, and professionalism to this address.

Getting a table at Spire in the last half of August proved to be a challenge and an opportunity: a challenge because the bargain menus of Restaurant Week made reservations difficult to come by, and an opportunity because it led me to explore Spire's elegant and sophisticated bar as a dining venue. The area around the bar is furnished with a few bar-height tables with comfortable, heavy black leather upholstered bar stools. On one evening, the bartender even set dining places at the bar itself, with oversized white napkins as place mats flanked by a full complement of Spire's luxurious, substantial tableware and graceful stemware. The only thing missing was Spire's excellent bread, hard-crusted French rolls from Iggy's, and this omission was quickly remedied on request. At one of my two meals in the bar, I was served an amuse gueule of roast duck, cracked olives, almonds and fennel—just two mouthfuls attractively presented on a tiny, square white dish. While I was not similarly favored on my second dinner in the bar, on my third visit, when I was seated in the dining room, another of these gratis treats, a dollop of halibut puree with a piquant sauce of smoked ham, nuts and a touch of tomato, hit the spot.

Restaurant Week seemed a splendid opportunity to sample Spire's cuisine under its new regime in the kitchen, enabling one to enjoy multiple courses at a savings of about a third off the regular menu prices (which offer appetizers averaging over $12 and main courses averaging over $30). When Frasca's creations began to arrive, however, all thought of bargains disappeared, for the quality of the ingredients and level of artistry with which they were transformed did not reflect the reduced prices. Frasca's heirloom tomato tasting (part of the $30 three-course dinner menu) brought a handsome array of yellow, red, orange, purple and green tomatoes, their superb, herbaceous flavors nicely balanced between sweet and tart, with a few small spoonfuls of fresh ricotta cheese providing a mellow foil. An accompanying salad of baby greens, minty basil leaf, pine nuts, ham and a brioche crouton dressed in a simple vinaigrette constituted a substantial dividend that could have stood on its own as a salad appetizer. But that was not all. A crowning glory of this well-conceived dish was a small cup of clear, cold tomato consommé, an ambrosial nectar ethereal in body but intense in intriguingly perfumed flavor. After this tour de force, the lunchtime heirloom tomato salad appetizer made less of an impression—four slices of multihued tomatoes under a generous mound of pleasantly bitter arugula and more of the ricotta cheese—but in any fair comparison, and on an absolute scale, it was first-class.

Other appetizers included a corn soup with chanterelle mushrooms, smoked bacon, pureed leeks, and parsley, filling but not heavy, sweet but not cloying, with vibrant flavor and creamy texture. Even its manner of service impressed: The server poured it at table from a French carafe over the bacon and mushrooms. Finally among the appetizers, the tempura of shrimp, asparagus and oyster mushrooms ($11 at lunch; $12 in the evening on the bar menu) brought three gigantic shrimp, lightly battered and quick fried, along with three tempura-fried spears of asparagus and oyster mushrooms. First-rate textures, clean, fresh flavors and a mild, nuanced ginger dipping sauce made this a winner as appetizer or bar food.

Spire's main courses included brined pork tenderloin—six or seven generous slices of pink, moist, melt-in-the-mouth-tender pork. Needing no sauce or herbal enhancement other than salt and pepper, the pork's delicate flavor was sufficient unto itself, an example of the chef getting out of the way of the food. Seared duck leg confit ($14 on the lunch menu) was classic: a moist, tender, robustly flavored thigh and drumstick with crispy, salty skin. The accompaniment of prunes, some of them stuffed with foie gras, lent a fruity sweetness that complemented the flavor of the duck while warm, wilted greens, dressed with a heady 15-year-old balsamic vinegar served as the perfect accompaniment.

Not as successful, the organic chicken "confit" ($23) was tough, with skin less than crisp and flavors bland and flat. When I asked the server why it was called confit, which usually describes meat cooked and preserved in its own fat, he admitted that it was something of a misnomer, explaining that this chicken had been brined to tenderize it (apparently unsuccessfully) and then cooked briefly in fat before broiling or roasting. Whatever the explanation, the chicken dish was the only discordant note in my three visits to Spire, with even its garnishes—tough unchewable fennel and pitifully tiny cubes of cantaloupe—failing to measure up. In contrast to the disappointing chicken, a wild American snapper garnished with a "gazpacho" of cucumber, zucchini, tomat reen onion and avocado highlighted rasca's flair for imaginative combinations nd his ability to coax vibrant flavors out f fresh summer vegetables, as well as his kill in preserving the firm texture of a delicate fish.

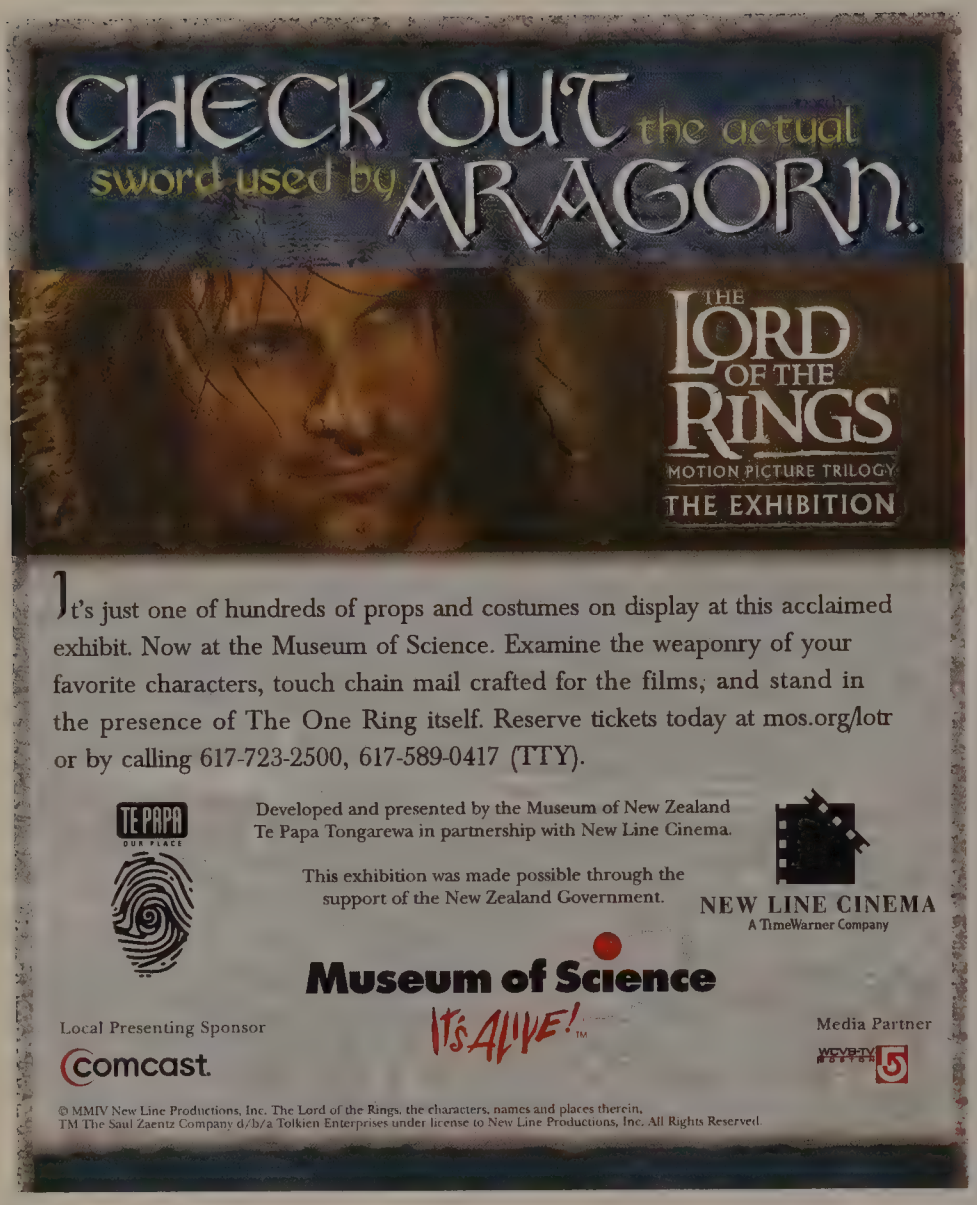
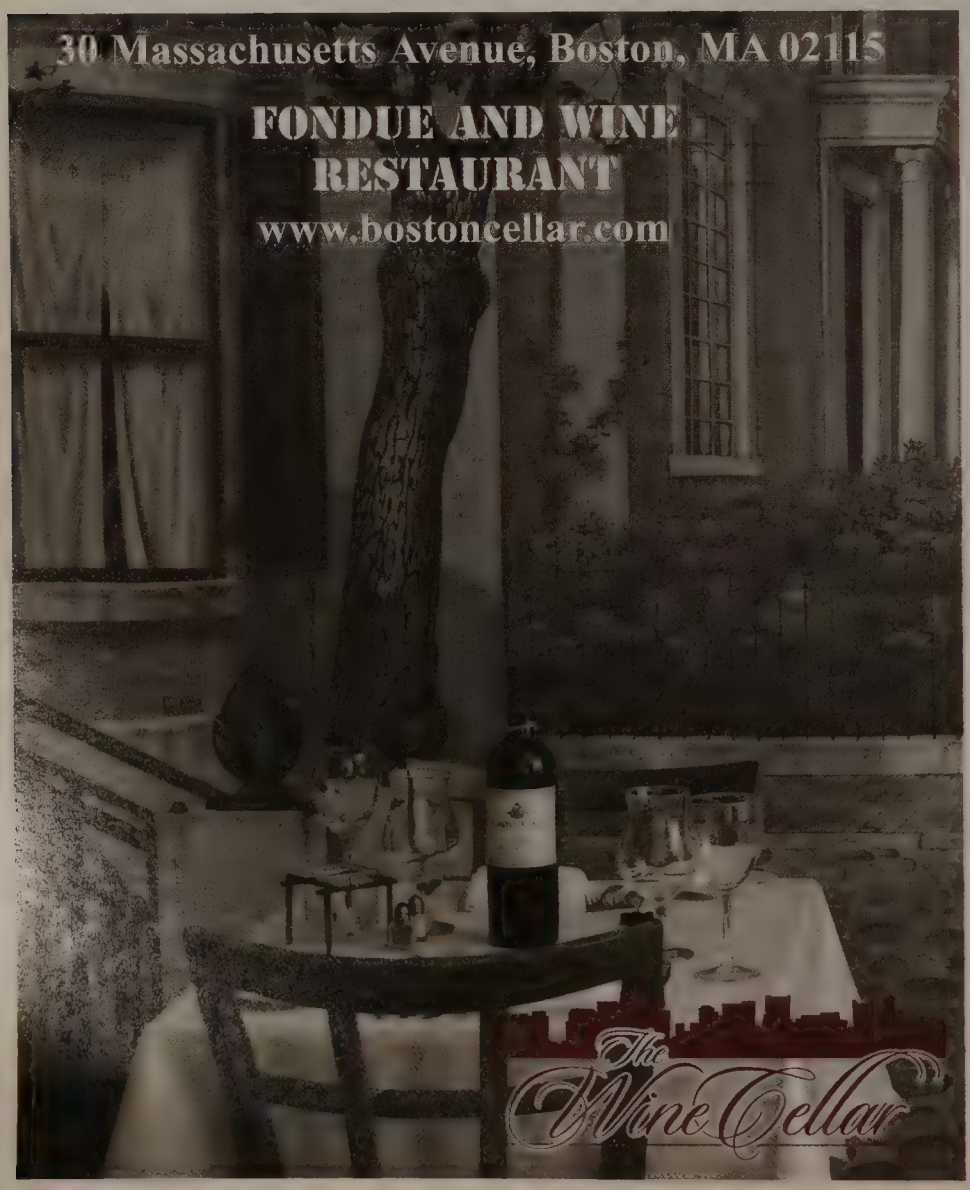
Fruity summer desserts delivered delightful punctuation marks at each meal's onclusion. Heirloom stone fruit cobler—heirlooms of various species have aken over restaurant menus these days—as constructed around a rich, buttery hortcake one day and a moist cornbread iscuit on another, both times with lusious peaches, firm but flavorful nectarines nd juicy plums. A scoop of lemon-thyme e cream lent a perfumed enchantment to ne ensemble. The idea of seasoning ice ream with thyme seemed offbeat, but it orked. Another dessert, also served as art of the prix fixe Restaurant Week enu, was the hibiscus and Champagne oup," a refreshing mélange of blueberries, spberries, tiny melon balls and a scoop of mony sheep's milk yogurt sorbet, around hich the server poured a scarlet stream of ngy raspberry coulis.



Spire's lengthy wine list bottoms at $30 bottle with few choices under $40, but by oston standards, it delivers value for its ices. At the lower end, I enjoyed a glass house cabernet sauvignon ($9), full bodd with a primitive grapiness but having ecent backbone and good acid. A bottle Brut d'Argent ($30), a sparkler from the ench countryside, did double duty as an beritif and a versatile dinner wine.



Service at Spire ranged from very good to excellent, even during the hectic rush of Restaurant Week. Things started on a dubious note at my second dinner in the bar, when, spoiled by the bartender's conscientious attention a few days earlier, I was surprised that the server had to be asked to set up a place setting at one of the cocktail tables, and disappointed when the amuse gueule was omitted. Still, aside from these minor lapses, the staff (particularly a very observant and hospitable maître d') gave the place an aura of refinement and professionalism. Finally, the look and feel of Spire continues to distinguish it as one of Boston's most attractive dining environments. Eating in the bar gave me the opportunity to appreciate the venue's sleek, 21st-century lines, from the small, uncluttered array of well-chosen bottles of distinguished potables (standard bar brands were presumably in the well) to the smart, plasma-screen television against one wall.

Spire's location, on the second floor of the small boutique hotel Nine Zero on Tremont Street between the Omni Parker House and the Beantown Pub, may well keep it below the public radar. I was surprised that one of my colleagues had never heard of it, let alone dined there. She is now a convert and will inevitably return. Since Spire's participation in the Restaurant Week pricing promotion was the proximate cause of our visit, one of the rationales of the program—to encourage patrons to sample places they might not visit—was well served. iB

BOSTON TEA PARTIES

December 16 marks the 231st anniversary of the Boston Tea Party, but for local tea aficionados September is shaping up as the month to really get out and celebrate. That's because author and world-renowned tea specialist James Norwood Pratt is making three area appearances. On September 22, Pratt is at Cambridge's Harvest Restaurant to introduce a special five-course tea-themed menu, answer questions and sign copies of his book The New Tea Lover's Treasury. On the 23rd, Pratt moves to the Park Plaza Hotel for a fund-raising talk entitled "Enjoying Tea Is Enjoying Life." Finally, on the 24th, he ends his Boston tour with a complimentary tea tasting, discussion and book signing at Newbury Street's Trident Cafe. Harvest, 44 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-868-2255), 7 pm, $39; Park Plaza Hotel, 64 Arlington St., Boston (617-426-2000), 7 pm, $35 (supports Community Servings); Trident Booksellers and Cafe, 338 Newbury St., Boston (617-267-8688), 7 pm, free. —R.L.

Plus, Restaurant Week rundown

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

An artist's rendering of Ed Doyle's new restaurant in Kenmore Square

When we heard that Ed Doyle, formerly of Aura at the Seaport Hotel and more recently a consultant on projects all over New England, was opening a restaurant inside the Hotel Commonwealth in Kenmore Square, we were…surprised. After all, hadn't he been working toward opening his very own restaurant, dubbed Haven, in a spot he'd already selected? Well, sort of yes and sort of no. Doyle says he's "doing development and consulting" while his personal project is "in limbo," encumbered by the intricacies of Boston development policies. So, will Doyle be the chef at the Commonwealth's as-yet-unnamed, 6,000-square-foot brasserie?

"Right now, we're focusing on getting everything up and going," he says, declining to provide a direct answer. "This thing is moving ahead; it's not a cocktail-napkin project." Much bigger than a cocktail napkin, with 170 seats inside and 70 seats planned for an outside patio, the project is being designed by Peter Niemitz and is slated to open by the end of the year. Meanwhile, Doyle has been inundated by suggestions for restaurant names. "Some pretty funny ones in here," he says. "Brasserie Rat, in honor of the old Kenmore Square Rathskeller. And BU professors send in a lot of literary references. Nothing like shooting over your consumer's head!"

SECOND COURSE

What's the true meaning of Restaurant Week? It depends on who you ask. For some restaurateurs, it's a foolproof way to fill tables during the slow days of August. "We did phenomenal business," says Michael Leviton, chef/owner of Lumiere in West Newton. "We had a waiting list," reports Jody Adams, chef/owner of Rialto, one of more than 20 restaurants that sold out every seat. More than 30 restaurants extended their RW menus an extra week, including Spire at the Nine Zero hotel. "We're not doing it to make money, or to thank regular diners," says chef Gabriel Frasca, but to attract new diners who make a point of asking for a business card before they leave. "We happily give out our digits," he adds.

If you asked one couple (who will remain nameless), Restaurant Week meant the opportunity to claim a table and brazenly inquire if they could share one $30.04 dinner (the answer was a polite but firm "no"). Fo a female diner at Mantra, it meant an ap parent temporary loss of social inhibition as she literally licked a plate, to the aston ishment of management. For a party of si at Rialto, it was the inspiration to suggest "we think you ought to use these prices or your regular menu." For most diners, how ever, it was a terrific chance to sample the menu at upscale spots without upscal prices. And most were appreciative: "On table was so enthralled they tipped $80 or a $200 tab, though that's the exception," says Michael Leviton.

After extensive renovation and redecora tion, Umbria will open in early October i the space formerly occupied by Trattoria i Panino. Now open: Picco, Rick Katz's pizz and ice cream emporium, in the posh Ate lier 505 building in the South End. Nov serving barbecue all the time: Rouge [Red] Chef/owner Andy Husbands' Southern-in spired menu is still available, but there's n holding back on the BBQ sauce after Hus bands' recent stellar achievements: He an teammate Chris Hart (who've dubbed thei Harpoon-sponsored crew the UFO Socia Club) claimed the title of Grand Champi ons at this year's New England Regiona BBQ Championships, in Windsor, Vt. Th team, which also won the 2004 New Hamp shire State Championship, will go on t compete at the Jack Daniel's World Cham pionship Invitational BBQ Competition fo the third consecutive year. Congratulation also to overachiever Husbands on the publi cation of his first book, The Fearless Che That's fearless, not beerless. IB

Music: Dynamic Duo

Fans of indie-rock, jazz, jam bands and instrumental quasi-goth post-rock will be milling about T.T. the Bear's Place September 25 when Canadian ensemble Do Make Say Think returns to our fair city, this time pairing up with labelmates and Massachusetts trio the Mobius Band (pictured, right). When the Mobius Band plays, it's a veritable indie rockapalooza—the masters of electronic rock have recently finished recording with noted producer Peter Katis and have performed with a who's-who of elite indie-rockers, including Mouse on Mars, Yo La Tengo and the Raveonettes. Do Make Say Think is an offshoot of the infamous Godspeed You Black Emperor! and provides a counterpoint to that group's dramatic sway between joy and misery, hovering between the two extremes while creating droning, hypnotic grooves that pull the listener along. T.T. the Bear's Place, 10 Brookline St., Cambridge (617-492-2327). 9 pm. 18+. $8.

Tastings: Phantom Foodies

While it's definitely a nightlife hot spot, Lansdowne Street isn't much of a daytime destination. Stop by on a Sunday, say between 12 and 6 pm, and the only evidence of a party you're likely to find is a half-eaten sausage and maybe a couple of fluorescent plastic wristbands blowing down the street like tumbleweeds. But on Sunday, October 3, Lansdowne will be a ghost town in a different way. Boston's famous food critic in disguise, the Phantom Gourmet, teams with nightlife titan Patrick Lyons and UPN-38 to present a smorgasbord of good eats at the first-ever Phantom Gourmet Food Festival. The feeding frenzy includes 18 local restaurants and food vendors—including Legal Sea Foods, Kelly's Roast Beef, the Sausage Guy, Fuddruckers, Geoff & Drew's cookies and others—showcasing their signature dishes in categories like barbecue, ballpark food, desserts and even a mini North End and Chinatown. So diners can expect to sample Firefly's pulled pork and Fuddruckers' burgers, among other treats. Once they've had their fill, patrons can watch the Sox and Pats games at Avalon, enjoy drinks in the beer and wine garden or entertain the crowd themselves at the karaoke stand. Lansdowne Street, Boston (617-423-6000). www.phantomgourmet.com. 12-6 pm. $15, $5 children.

MON./OCT. 4

Books & Poetry: Literary Luminaries

Each year, an army of authors responds to local literary maven Alice Hoffman's call to raise money for her foundation, the Hoffman Breast Cancer Center at Mount Auburn Hospital. Hoffman (Here on Earth, Practical Magic, Blue Diary) hosts the annual event, An Evening with Your Favorite Authors, at the Charles Hotel, and for $250, attendees can meet and hear readings from authors. This year's line-up includes Judy Blume (Wifey), Chris Bohjalian (Midwives), Susan Cheever (author of five novels and four memoirs), Andre Dubus III (House of Sand and Fog), Arthur Golden (Memoirs of a Geisha), Wally Lamb (I Know This Much Is True), Jill McCorkle (Creatures of Habit) and Amy Tan (The Joy Luck Club, The Bonesetter's Daughter). While sipping cocktails and munching on hors d'oeuvres, guests can bid on auction items and enter raffles for prizes including a Mini Cooper; a trip to NYC to attend a Saturday Night Live broadcast and a party with the cast; dinner with Hoffman and nine guests at Harvest; cocktails for 20 at Robert Parker's home; their name as a character in a Jill McCorkle novel and more. Charles Hotel, One Bennett St., Cambridge (617-499-5098). 6 pm. $250.

Music: All That Jazz

If you missed out on this summer's concerts at FleetBoston Pavilion, the Tweeter Center, Esplanade or even Fenway, and still crave a little music alfresco, you'd better hurry up. The season's outdoor concert days are numbered, but it's not too late to get your fresh air musical fix at one of the city's most unique outdoor music events: the Beantown Jazz Fest. Now in its fourth year, the festival boasts its best billing to date. Grammy Award–nominated saxophonist Najee, who's toured with jazz and R&B greats like Quincy Jones, Patti LaBelle and Prince, headlines this year's festival, which also features local jazz outfits La Timba Loca, Paul White, Myanna, Patrice Williamson, Wannetta Jackson and others. BJF founder and producer Darryl Settles expects more than 40,000 visitors to take to the South End streets for music and dancing on the 25th. And music isn't the only draw. Patrons can chow down on Southern-inspired cuisine like Creole jambalaya, glorified fried chicken, mustard-fried catfish, and samosas from Bob the Chef's and Tremont 647. Proceeds from the day benefit prostate cancer awareness. Columbus Avenue, between Mass. Ave. and Burke Street, Boston (866-442-7995). www.beantownjazz.org. Sept. 25, 12-6 pm. $5 suggested donation.

FRI. & SAT./OCT. 1 & 2

CityScope: Bavarian Nation

We haven't actually been to Germany for Oktoberfest, but we laughed our keisters off at National Lampoon's European Vacation, and anything involving lederhosen sounds like a swell time to us. Someday, when we have roughly $2,800 for a flight to Munich, we'll yuck it up Clark Griswold style with the real Bavarians. Until then, you can find us in Southie washing down schnitzel and sauerkraut with a frosty one at Harpoon Brewery's 15th annual Octoberfest. More than 12,000 beer drinkers are expected to converge on the brewery for the two-day shindig with its menu of knockwurst, bratwurst, Harpoon IPA and Octoberfest beer, and Vermont Draft soda. You can indulge your appetite and your competitive side in a German chocolate cake eating contest and a chicken-dance contest. And with no less than five bands, including German-oompah-style bands the Kopperschmidts and the Mad Bavarian Brass Band plus local party-funkers Rippopotamus providing live musical entertainment, we suspect there'll be Hosenträgers to spare. Oct. 1, 5:30–11 pm (entrance closes at 9:30 pm); Oct. 2, 3:30–9 pm (entrance closes at 7 pm). 306 Northern Ave., Boston (1-888-427-7666). www.harpoonbrewery.com. $12 door, cash bar.

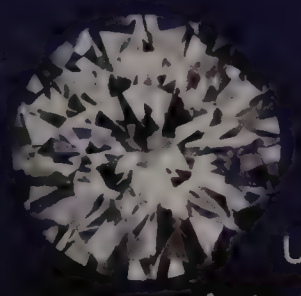
Celebrities on Ice

Some of the biggest names in Hollywood and hockey take the ice for charity.

With the current NHL labor dispute between players and owners jeopardizing the 2004 season, the FleetCenter won't exactly be a hockey hotbed this fall and winter. But on October 3, puckheads can get their fix at Denis Leary's fifth annual "Hockey's Greatest Skate for America's Bravest" charity game.

As always, the game features a collection of NHL greats as well as some of Hollywood's biggest names. This year's roster includes hockey stars Cam Neely, Pat LaFontaine and Ken Hodge, plus actors Tim Robbins, Kiefer Sutherland, Michael J. Fox and Steve Buscemi, among others.

Michael J. Fox, Denis Leary and hockey legend Gordie Howe at last year's benefit



"I am so proud that this event has been around for five years," Leary says. "The support we have received from firefighters, Hollywood and fans of hockey has been amazing."

All proceeds from the game, co-sponsored by THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN, benefit the Leary Firefighters Foundation, which provides funding for fire departments to improve their equipment, technology and training as well as resources to families of firefighters who've been injured or killed in the line of duty. Tickets run from $25–$100 which is on a par with the cost of a B's game, but this time your money goes to a worthy cause, as opposed to Jeremy Jacobs' petty-cash fund.

Dead Funny

Shaun of the Dead is a scream.

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Simon Pegg (right) stars as the slightly clueless title character in the carnivorous English zombie comedy Shaun of the Dead

Like the zombies that slowly surround him and his circle of friends, the title character of the very funny English comedy Shaun of the Dead springs back to life over the course of the movie. Shaun (co-writer Simon Pegg) is an affable bloke whose lack of ambition finds him stuck at a job requiring a name tag, and whose lack of romantic inspiration finds him dumped by his girlfriend, Liz (Kate Ashfield), because all he ever wants to do is hang out at his local pub.

You might also say Shaun is a tad self-involved. As Shaun of the Dead sets up its comedy and conflicts—which also involve Shaun's slovenly roommate, Ed (Nick Frost)—its hero is oblivious to the disaster that's struck every corner he walks by and to the footage on every TV he passes, heavy with crime scene tape and the hushed tones of oh-so-serious news anchors.

After a crazed woman tries to attack Shaun and Ed in their back garden, even Shaun is forced to look past his own nose and notice the carnage around him. He also notices the command to "sort out your life!" (uttered by Liz as she dumped him) that he drunkenly scrawled on his refrigerator's message board the night before. Shaun the slacker decides to become Shaun the man of action.

One of the movie's funnier sequences then follows, as Shaun imagines several scenarios (with matching visuals) in which, with the help of Ed, he can rescue his mom (Penelope Wilton) and Liz. In each, he finishes the day at the pub, a pint in one hand and a satisfied grin on his kisser. Easier said than done. When Shaun and Ed try to implement one of these plans, they first have to dodge the cluster of meat-eating zombies on their street, and when they get to Shaun's mom's, they have to deal with his stepdad (Bill Nighy of Love Actually), who was bitten in the street and, unbeknownst to mom, is riding a one-way train to Zombieville.

More complications arise when, in order to get Liz to come along, Shaun also has to convince her roommates—Dianne (Lucy Davis of The Office) and her stick-in-the-mud boyfriend David, who seems to prefer Liz to Di— to join them. Then it's off to the pub—eluding zombie hordes on the way—where the familiar horror premise of a group of people confined in a small space and besieged from the outside gets a clever comic twist.

Those comic twists work sc well because the comedy in Shaun of the Dead scores right from the start. This isn't just a horror spoof à la Scream, it's a movie about funny characters. Director and cowriter Edgar Wright knows how to set up gags and put them across (he, Pegg and much of the cast have mostly English TV comedies in their past credits). Whether it's characters' habit of saying "What's that supposed to mean?" to glaringly obvious accusations or the "bizarro" Seinfeld moment in which Shaun, his slovenly roommate, mom, ex-girlfriend and her roommates run into Shaun's friend Yvonne (Jessica Stevenson), her slovenly roommate, mom, ex-boyfriend and his roommates, Shaun of the Dead is more unpredictable than a mere spoof.

Once Shaun and his band of would-be survivors make it to the Winchester, his favorite pub, the horror and the physical comedy intensify, thanks to the behind-the-bar rifle that gives the pub its name, as well as the tangled web of romantic feelings running among the group and the heated argument over what to do when one of them reveals a zombie bite suffered on the trek to the pub.

Shots are fired, flesh is ripped, friends are mourned and, somewhere along the way, Liz is perhaps convinced that Shaun has left his feckless ways behind him. In other words, for a movie with more deaths than an armed revolution, Shaun of the Dead also has an effectively sweet side. And it's a horror-comedy worthy of standing alongside those 1980s greats, Return of the Living Dead and Evil Dead 2. iB

Shaun of the Dead ★★★

Directed by Edgar Wright. Written by Simon Pegg and Wright. With Pegg, Kate Ashfield, Nick Frost, Dylan Moran, Lucy Davis, Penelope Wilton and Bill Nighy. Rated R. At Kendall Square.

New Releases

Bright Leaves ★★½
As always, the latest nonfiction movie from loca based filmmaker Ross (Sherman's March) attemp to blend an outer and an inner pursuit. This tim the outer pursuit is an examination of the mix blessing of North Carolina's tobacco indust which McElwee's great-grandfather helped to pi neer and which still has a grip on his home sta despite the health havoc it has wreaked. McElwe inner pursuit, as has often been the case in his filn is an investigation of the relationship betwe memory and reality. Memory is often represent here by film, as a cousin shows McElwee a Ga Cooper movie (Bright Leaf) in which the star play character based on their great-grandfather, and McElwee tries to figure out why he's compulsiv filmed his son's childhood. The movie is a fishi expedition that doesn't always come back with i triguing catches (for instance, McElwee asked t "why do I film?" question more interestingly in I Time Indefinite), though those who've followed l movies over the years will find more to dig in than first-timers will. (At Kendall Square.)

Bush's Brain ★★★
The moviemaking never gets beyond the basic sta but Joseph Mealey and Michael Shoob's document (based on the book by James C. Moore and Way Slater) offers an effectively appalled look at Wh House senior adviser Karl Rove. Bush's Brain chro cles a succession of Nixon-worthy tactics by Ro from Texas state politics shenanigans to the smear of John McCain during the 2000 South Caroli presidential primary. There are no smoking guns, l the circumstantial evidence detailed by the auth and other veteran Texas journalists is harrowing. (Kendall Square.)

A Dirty Shame ★★
It's been a long time since Multiple Maniacs, Jo Waters' 1970 comedy in which the heroes p formed in a rebellious traveling "Cavalcade of P version." If his new movie, in which Baltimore b collar sex addicts are the heroes, had been ma then, it might have worked. But nowadays, wh sex is used to sell everything and is everywhere the media (from Stern to Springer to Spears) seems awfully passé. That's part of the reason w the laughs are sparse, and why only a few charact are consistently amusing (mainly Suzanne Sheph as the crusty leader of the "decency" forces fight the sex addicts and Jackie Hoffman as one of t more creative sexaholics). Too much of the mo just seems sophomoric. (At Coolidge Corner a Kendall Square.)

Donnie Darko: The Director's Cut ★★½
If it ain't broke, don't fix it. Writer-director Rich Kelly's brilliant Donnie Darko returns—not in version that struck an emotional chord in so ma despite being barely marketed in 2001, but in D nie Darko: The Director's Cut, a new version r ning 20 minutes longer. Except this isn't a true rector's cut"; this 133-minute version never exis before now. If you haven't seen Donnie Darko, original version is a better introduction; if have, you've probably seen the added stuff alrea Most of the "restored" footage comes from dele scenes on the Donnie Darko DVD. Meanwh Kelly has also gone back and changed some of songs to what he originally wanted, but couldn ford in the budget. But wait a minute. Kelly or nally wanted U2's "MLK" at the climax. Michael Andrews and Gary Jules' unforgetta haunting version of Tears for Fears' "Mad Wor which became a surprise hit. So why didn't he place that too? Kelly should have remained satis with the other happy accidents in his movie as w (Midnight shows at Coolidge Corner.)

Fahrenheit 9/11 ★★★½
Rabble-rouser Michael Moore's passionate dec struction of the second Bush administration has knockout revelations about its controversial po cies, so don't expect smoking guns. Its ultimate get is the war in Iraq, but the movie presents war as just the latest in a pattern of self-servi law-skirting behavior. Moore comes up with spired ways of getting his points across ab much-debated Bush policies and conflicts of in est. He's onscreen less than he was in Roger & M The Big One and Bowling for Columbine, yet he gues such points better than in Columbine. Mo hits his targets because, despite his political ai he makes you feel like you're watching a mo not a political rant, and his sense of humor re shines through. (At Boston Common, Harv Square and suburbs.)

Garden State ★★½
The first film by actor-director Zach Braff (TV's Scrubs) has its moments of daffy humor, as Braff plays a struggling L.A. actor who returns to his New Jersey hometown for the first time in nine years. It recaptures the mixed emotions of such a visit, especially of seeing old high school friends, but it treads on very familiar territory. It feels like it wants to be a version of The Graduate directed by Wes Anderson (Rushmore), and it struggles to find any voice of its own. Plus, the story of a guy returning to his hometown who develops a quick bond with a Natalie Portman character has already been done, in 1996's Beautiful Girls. Braff and Portman have a pleasing chemistry, and Braff is to be commended for trying to make something quirky and personal. But it's hard not to feel this movie is redundant. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Hero ★★★
Zhang Yimou's drama is the dreamiest martial arts movie since Wong Kar Wai's Ashes of Time, with which it shares stars Tony Leung Chiu Wai and Maggie Cheung. This period piece about feudal China soars during its creative fight scenes, though the production design regularly gets out of hand (some scenes are so superficially "pretty" they look like perfume commercials). The title character played by Jet Li can also be as inexpressive as a compulsive Botox patient. But this is ambitious stuff, and the fight scenes and larger-than-life drama, fueled mostly by Cheung's performance, often pay off handsomely. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Open Water ★★★
No stars, no special effects—no problem. Writer-director Chris Kentis builds old-fashioned tension in his tale of a stressed-out L.A. couple who take a vacation in the tropics and go on a scuba tour, only to be left behind in shark-infested waters by the tour boat. Yikes. The shooting style and the actors (Daniel Travis and Blanchard Ryan) are raw enough that the movie almost feels like a home video (it was shot on digital video). And when the couple's trip turns into a life-threatening ordeal and the shark fins start slicing through the nearby waters, the action has a frightening intimacy. A well-needed boost of low-tech moviemaking at the multiplex. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Reconstruction ★★★
This stylish Danish romantic drama takes place at least partially within the head of one of its characters. Is it the photographer (Nikolaj Lie Kaas) who's unsure of his love for his girlfriend (Maria Bonnevie)? The neglected married woman (Bonnevie, as well) he meets and starts a fling with? Or the woman's novelist husband (Krister Kenriksson)? The story certainly gets balled up in such questions by the time it's over, but its adulterous central relationship also gives off such a palpable charge of physical attraction and is such an intriguing experience that Reconstruction never becomes as pretentious as it might have. (At Kendall Square.)

Resident Evil 2: Apocalypse ★½
The first one was an obnoxious mish-mash of Aliens and Night of the Living Dead, starring stiff Milla Jovovich. The sequel borrows elements from yet more sci-fi/horror films, but unlike the superior 28 Days Later or Shaun of the Dead, it adds no new twists. Even more unnecessary than most sequels. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Silver City ★★
Part political satire and part thriller, John Sayles' latest is unsatisfying on both levels. It usually falls short because the cheesy satire gets in the way of the more interesting thriller. That satire casts Chris Cooper as Dubya-like Dickie Pilager (that's right, pronounced "pillager"), dim-witted scion of the Pilager political family. It's obvious, it's lazy, we've seen it before and, as Fahrenheit 9/11 showed, the real thing is more freakishly amusing. The thriller essentially retreads Chinatown in its tale of Western political corruption for economic gain from natural resources. Although Danny O'Brien (Danny Huston), the private eye and lapsed idealist at the heart of the thriller, is an interesting character to watch as his idealism is rekindled, a half movie doesn't leave him much room to grow. (At Copley Place, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

We Don't Live Here Anymore ★★
But, then again, who'd want to live where this cold drama takes place? This story of the indiscretion-filled love lives of best-friend professors Mark Ruffalo and Peter Krause and wives Laura Dern and Naomi Watts is one big neurotic twitch, given a stuffy air by its academic setting and director John Curran's use of classical music. The story examines what happens when one of the pals has an affair with the other's wife, but it never really gets inside the heads of its characters, and Ruffalo and Watts are given little chance to exude much sexual chemistry together. Bob & Carol & Ted & Alice it ain't. (At Harvard Square and suburbs.)

The Yes Men ★★★

Shake and Bake

Cake mixes synthetic ingredients into its idiosyncratic pop.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Cake has the icing of an art-pop group, cleverly wrapping sardonic lyrics in quirky, minimalist orchestrations. Yet the core of the Sacramento quintet's music is succinct and accessible enough that it's secured radio airplay for such singles as "The Distance," "Never There" and new entry "No Phone." Talk about being able to have your Cake and eat it too.

"We try not to be indulgent," trumpeter Vincent Di Fiore says. "We like to play a song and get the hell out before we take someone on a musical journey they may or may not appreciate. We've never wanted to seem like we're avant-garde or anything like that, because that's sort of shaky ground. We wanted to have solid craftsmanship and good songs."

That's what Cake has offered for 12 years, while steadily flirting with the mainstream. "We kind of got through by not being very popular, but being under the radar a little bit," says Di Fiore, who has been aboard from the start with singer-songwriter John McCrea.

"We didn't make a big push to bring a lot of attention to ourselves, so that we'd prop ourselves up for people to knock us down," he adds. "We just had a combination of people in the band who were able to get along together, and didn't have a shortage of songs, and had some success with singles on the radio. And mostly, it's just a strong base of people who are willing to listen to our music and come out to our shows."

Those fans will get another chance to see Cake on a tour that rolls into the Orpheum Theatre October 7, two days after the release of the group's fifth CD, Pressure Chief.

"We have a set list now that we look at every song and say people are going to know almost every one," Di Fiore says. "The most obscure songs we play now are the new songs."

That may change. Pressure Chief has a batch of catchy tunes, recorded to hard disk in a home studio where Cake handled production itself. "It's nice to touch the knobs without feeling like you're not following the protocol of the studio, and getting in someone's way," Di Fiore says. "The band sort of started as Luddites. We're not really anti-technology, but there was something we liked about old amplifiers and small, cheap, acoustic instruments. Now we're embracing this technology and finding that it's a lot of fun, and that it doesn't hurt the music."

Di Fiore, McCrea, bassist Gabe Nelson and guitarist Xan McCurdy all supplemented their usual instruments with turns at a variety of synthesizers. "We tried to use them as well as we could and in as many places as possible without making the record sound cold," Di Fiore says of the synthetic touches, which extended to programmed rhythms, though drummer Paulo Baldi is back in action on the tour.

"We wanted to try something different," Di Fiore says of the recording, which also took advantage of the computer editing system Pro Tools. "You can move things around so easily, without splicing magnetic tape from reel to reel. You can copy and paste like you do on MacIntosh programs, or word-processing programs and e-mail. It's the same thing, but applied to music."

Nonetheless, Pressure Chief is still laced with the familiar taste of Cake. First, there's McCrea's wry and dry lyrical terrain, from the woeful relationship cycle of "Wheels" and communication overload of "No Phone" to the anti-pollution "Carbon Monoxide," in which he cries, "Where's the air?"

"That saying 'The personal is the political' is a really good way to describe the way John will write a song," Di Fiore says. "The songs are written in a crafty enough way that they're really about personal issues, but there's some sort of political worldview that's implied."

Then there are Di Fiore's sly trumpet lines. "Somebody said that [they're] oddly cinematic, which is a good description," says Di Fiore, who embraces such disparate influences as War, Sly & the Family Stone, the Beatles and Motown, as well as Mexican norteña, mariachi and ranchera music.

"People say, 'I don't know how to describe your music—it's eclectic and you have so many influences.' But if you look at the bands in the '70s, that's true about those bands, all of those songs that are lasting."

From a band that once covered Gloria Gaynor's disco anthem "I Will Survive," the new CD offers a sober take on another '70s tune, "Guitar Man," by soft-rock staple Bread.

"We're doing it maybe a bit tongue-in-cheek, but we were very serious about doing that song justice," Di Fiore says. "It's kind of a funny song for us to do because it's about the delusional life of a rock guitarist." iB

READ ME

Bostonians are extraordinarily passionate about books. The Improper Bostonian's Literary Issue will reach out to the heart of every bookworm. First, we will feature a round-up of major new books by Boston authors. Next, the Improper goes undercover: many mystery writers live in the Hub and base their stories here; we investigate this phenomenon to see what makes Boston such a mystery epicenter.

The Improper will also announce the winner of our annual fiction contest. More than 200 readers submitted original works to be judged by author and New Yorker writer Susan Orlean. The winning story will be published in the Literary Issue, and the winning writer will receive a slew of fun prizes!

RECENT CORRESPONDENCE FOLLOWS.

To the Innocent Male Pedestrian

You were climbing the ramp from the Charles River Esplanade to the Mass. Ave. bridge. Please accept my apology for smacking into you and your briefcase as I ran by. I get so annoyed by all the inconsiderate people who don't pay attention to others around them, and my last straw was the group loitering at the top of the ramp there. I didn't mean to take my frustrations out on you and I apologize. Sincerely, —The female runner in the green shirt

Corners Frame Shop Encounter

You were picking up your custom frame from Corners in Porter Square September 4. You are amazingly cute with blond hair and you caught my attention. I think you drive a blue Ford Escort. I was by the counter—tall, auburn hair, blue eyes—and was wearing a visor and Ironman T-shirt. We exchanged glances, but my shy nature kept me from introducing myself to you. I'd like a second chance to make a first impression. Please get in touch with me if you'd like to meet.
—roadlesstraveled1@hotmail.com

Construction Workers, Broad Street

It's amazing and a total treat to keep an eye on all you constructions workers while I am trying to work. One man in particular catches my fancy—shaved head—what's your story? I'm an attractive 43-year-old divorced white female working in Boston. I live alone just west of the city and have no children. Want to meet for a cocktail after your shift sometime? I would love to hear from you —daral0077@yahoo.com

Shared Smiles

We were stranded together on a T transfer bus between Park Street and Kendall Square September 5 at 6 pm. We were about to instigate a revolt and we shared some smiles. We got separated offloading at the station. I made a big mistake and headed for my car without catching your name. I turned around to see you obviously waiting (for me?). I should have at least asked for your number or offered a ride, for a few steps later you were gone and I felt like I let the woman of lifetime slip away. If fate finds you reading this, your tall dark stranger can be found. E-mail me.

Jeannie!

Biracial beauty and hair extension specialist, where are you? We worked together at the original and infamous John Dellaria on Newbury Street so many years ago. I've been searching for you for so long. Margaret told me you had left the country and moved to Poland. (I still don't trust her.) You were working downtown for awhile and I called "that place" and they said you'd left. I need to talk to you! Contact me.

rockie horoscope

SEPTEMBER 22–OCTOBER 5, 2004 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

LIBRA SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

It's almost like being in love—but not exactly. While your romantic Venus ruler confronts delusional Neptune, you could be handed the biggest bunch of bull you've encountered all year. The opposition brings a matter that began around Valentine's Day to a head and insists that it be resolved one way or another. You can rely on Scorpio and Sag friends to support your position, but more importantly, by the 26th, you'll have the aggregate power of the sun, Mars and Jupiter in your own sign. Unstoppable, unflappable.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Power to the people, especially like-minded colleagues. The shift of the sun, Jupiter and Mars from critical Virgo to judicious Libra can dramatically affect your own viewpoint. Your incisive Mars co-ruler will no longer dwell on the specifics of a situation, but may campaign for a greater measure of fairness, at least until the election is history. Come Veterans Day, Mars will be in Scorpio and you'll have more determination and physical energy than you've had the past two years. But for the moment, opt for pleasure.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

This year the transition from summer to fall can be much more memorable because your beneficial Jupiter ruler is joined by the Virgo sun in your career midheaven. Although their conjunction occurs every year, this particular placement, this extraordinary example of empowerment, occurs once every 12 years. Let's hope your ducks are lined up and that you're prepared to score big-time. After the sky show shifts into sociable Libra, the pressure to excel eases up.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

In the course of the year, as generous Jupiter navigates through your Libra midheaven, you'll be offered easy access to important people and big, fat juicy rewards for the jobs you do take on. Having the planet of prosperity overseeing your career and reputation is relatively rare, so look at each opportunity that arises over the next 13 months as a better than average chance to hit the jackpot. No matter how simple or complicated, don't dismiss any offer out of hand. You never know when or where Lady Luck will drop by.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

You could play the magician while mystical, musical Neptune in your sign reaches out to loving Venus in your Leo house of partners. The attraction between you and a significant other may be strong, but it's not unbreakable. As two planets face off, push often comes to shove, but this particular polarity is a lot more subtle. Threats are usually veiled. Nonetheless, prosperous Jupiter's entrance into Libra should benefit a variety of joint financial matters.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Read for Aquarius because it's your impressionable Neptune ruler that's receiving undivided attention from artistic, romantic Venus. Fish tend to bank on the odds of achieving "happily ever after" under ordinary circumstances. However, during this annual but far from ordinary opposition, you're likely to let your imagination run away with you. Since there's precious little rooting you to reality after the sun, Jupiter and Mars leave earthbound Virgo, why not enjoy the flight?

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Hard work never killed anyone. Repeat your Mama's mantra each time you feel stressed to the breaking point. One more task on your "to-do" list might not be the straw that breaks the camel's back, but Virgo exactitude can ensure that your anxiety, perhaps a fear of failure, is real enough. Until your Mars ruler enters harmonious and relatively laid-back Libra on the 26th, doing the right thing, and doing it to the best of your ability, could become your main objective. That, plus a few words of endearment.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Bulls tend to respond to the delicious vibe sent out during the annual Venus-Neptune opposition with a passion usually reserved for imaginative Pisces. Hook a Fish and wallow in the illusions the two signs can create, and the delusions that'll disappoint you. Even if this turns out to be the most romantic month of the year, being lucky in love won't preclude your winning the lottery. On the 21st, magnanimous Jupiter and the sun merge in your house of risk and romance. Go ahead, take that chance.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

You started to make real progress once your Mercury ruler stepped out of the shadow it cast while it was retrograde last month. Also, with the advent of airy Libra, a psychological load was lifted, plus those picayune demands on your time and energy will soon be gone. After generous Jupiter enters Libra on the 24th, Twins are in for a full year of rewards and recognition. Make the most of the opportunities you're offered between now and Thanksgiving, before Mercury turns retrograde again and slows you down.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

With the arrival of the autumn equinox, your focus turns to home base and family history. This is usually a comfortable and a comforting place for the Crab, but not without its fair share of problems, particularly while Mars is marching through until Veterans Day. Fortunately, for the next 13 months you'll be protected by Jupiter making its once-every-12 years transit of Libra. The giant planet tends to see the bigger, more expensive picture, so don't be surprised if you envision yourself movin' on up.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Lions rule. No doubt, but the mighty jungle can become a more hospitable domain while Venus travels through your sign until October 3. Being this popular and attractive may do wonders for your social life too. Sudden urges to dress up and bling out could be justified by the presence of Venus, ruler of taste, treats and trends, but also by Jupiter's exit from prudent Virgo. Watch how your spending habits change and your income expands after Mr. Moneybags settles into Libra.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

This is possibly the best, most advantageous time in the past 12 years. Wise and protective Jupiter at the tail end Virgo merges with the creative, life-affirming sun to complete the cycle of personal growth and maturity that began last summer. Make your presentation, advance you theory, send in your résumé. And graciously accept whatever opportunities and accolades are offered in return. They can lead to a much larger income and a prestigious success story when lucky Jupiter takes over your Libra money house.

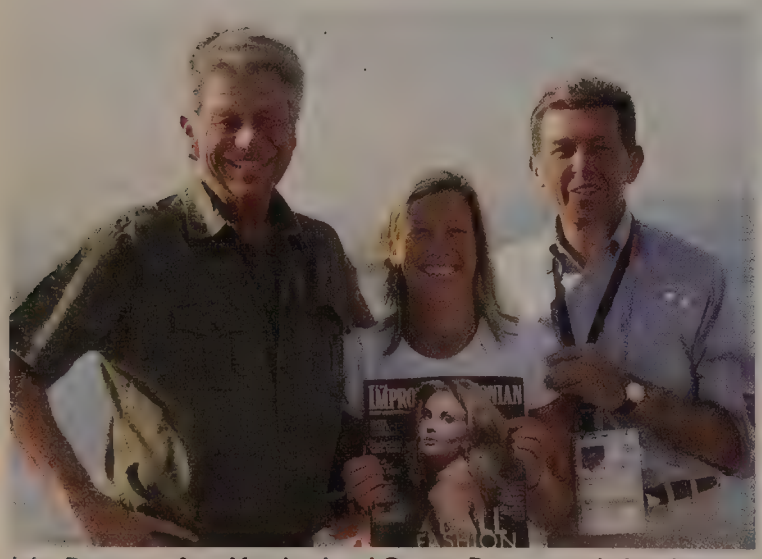
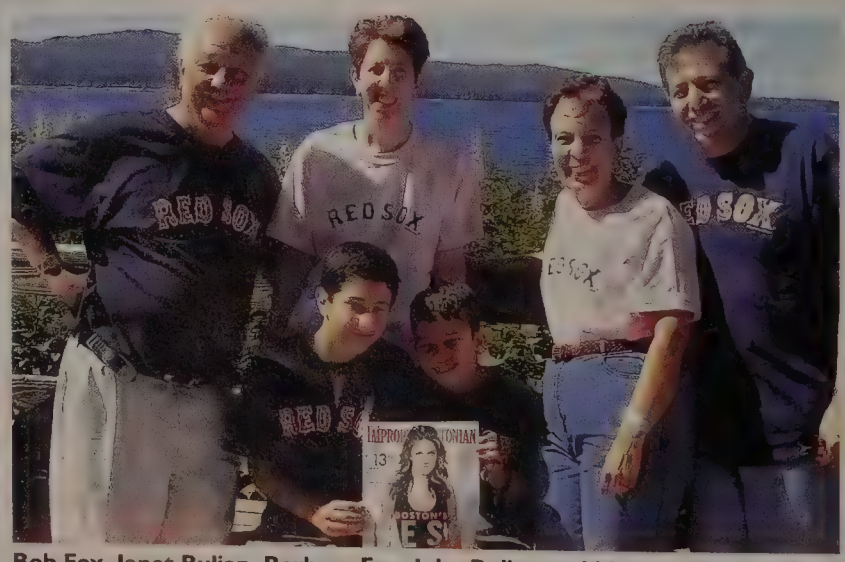
IMPROPER sightings

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.



Sara Xi, Monk Huize and Zhen Lu monk-ey around at the Jade Buddha Temple in Shanghai, China. "Huize" means "kind wiseman." Another translation is, "not Steinbrenner."



Greg Henry chilled out in Taveuni, Fiji. Next time you're talking about Rickey Williams being crazy, remember that he's probably somewhere like this right now and you're not.

Paul Karger, Arjun Viswanathan and Wes Karger get crazy-psyched up to run with the bulls in Pamplona, Spain, by reading the IMPROPER Interiors issue.

John Donovan, Amy Vreeland and George Regan traveled to Athens, Greece, where they executed a 1½ somersault vault and stuck the landing for a 9.825, upsetting Kim Dae-eun of South Korea.

Bob Fox, Janet Bulian, Barbara Fox, John Bulian and Max and Jake Bulian leave no doubt about where they're from in Ketchikan, Alaska. Ketchikan is an optimistic little town, as opposed to its dour neighbor, Ketchikan't.

John Wood, New Zealand ambassador to the U.S., enjoys the always kiwi-flavored IMPROPER.

The Comedy Connection 245 Quincy Market Place, Boston, 617-248-9700. www.comedyconnectionboston.com. 18+. The Comedy Connection, located on the 2nd Floor of the Quincy Market Building in the heart of Historical Faneuil Hall, is open seven nights a week and offers the best in local and national comedy. During the week, the nationally renowned club offers some of Boston's best comics like Kevin Knox, "The Wildman of Comedy," Paul Nardizzi and Don Gavin. On Thursday nights, Frank Santos, "The R-Rated Hypnotist" mesmerizes the audience and on the weekends, this is the only place to see the biggest names in comedy such as Jon Stewart, Chris Rock, Margaret Cho, Brian Regan, Jay Mohr, Dane Cook and George Lopez.

Dance Bars

Jose McIntyre's 160 Milk St., Boston 451-9460.

Boston's only Irish/Mexican cantina is a great escape in the financial district! Two floors, three bars, open-air dining, pool tables upstairs and live bands downstairs!

The Place 2 Broad St., Boston, 617-523-2081 www. theplaceboston.com. Drink. Dance. Mingle. Let your hair down; see and be seen on the big screen. Simply the hippest way to spend a night of all-out fun in Boston's Financial District. Come after work. Come to dance. Come to go wild with your friends. There's always something exciting happening – and you never know who you'll bump into. Join us and experience what the buzz is all about.

The Purple Shamrock 1 Union St., Boston, 617-227-2060. Known for its great food, live entertainment and relaxing atmosphere! Menu includes American and Irish specialties. Live cover bands nightly.

Irish

The Black Rose 160 State St., Boston, 617-742-2286. Boston's legendary Irish Pub celebrates its 25th year! Considered one of the best Irish pubs in America, the menu features American and Irish specialties. Live Irish music nightly.

Hennessy's of Boston 25 Union St., Boston,617-742-2121. Boston's most authentic Irish pub next to Faneuil Hall serves a great menu with daily specials and Irish traditions. A huge bar with an extensive beer and wine list, Hennessy's has Boston's best appetizer menu. Enjoy live entertainment five nights a week with pop bands direct from Ireland. Hennessy's of Boston, "Purveyor's of Fine Food and Spirits," are part of the Somers' Pubs Fleet.

The Grand Canal 57 Canal St., Boston, 617-523-1112. Hailed as the "crown jewel in the Irish pub empire of John Somers," this premiere Irish Bar features over fifty micro brews, an extensive wine list, a full international menu, and Boston's best appetizer menu. The Grand Canal hosts "Boston's Best Bands," and features Boston's only 12 foot video screen playing Bruins, Celtics, Patriots and Red Sox games. Enjoy a true "Irish Pub Experience."

Green Briar 304 Washington St., Brighton 617-789-4100. A little taste of Ireland with great tasting, affordable food. One of the most popular nightspots in town, the Green Briar has become the area's headquarters for international sports viewing and live entertainment. Live music five nights a week, featuring local bands on weekends, a traditional Irish Seissun every Monday night and Prime Time Trivia every Tuesday. The hospitable atmosphere makes the Green Briar an excellent place to hold luncheons, wedding rehearsals, social gatherings and small business meetings. Open 11 am - 1am 7 days a week. Cover charge varies on Friday and Saturday nights and some sporting events on Sundays.

The Green Dragon 11Marshall St., Boston, 617-367-0055. Hailed "Headquarters of the Revolution," this favorite after work meeting place is famous for it's "giant cocktail drink special menu." A comfortable place serving lunch and dinner and highly acclaimed Irish breakfast every Sat. & Sun. from 11 am to 3pm. The tavern boasts over 15 beers on tap, 20 different bottled "brewskies" and imported Irish brews. Live music and entertainment every Thursday through Sunday night.

Kinvara 34 Harvard Ave., Allston 617-783-9400. At the Kinvara, the crowd is spirited, the staff is hospitable, the food is great and everyone is treated as a "regular". It's the local gathering place with authentic Irish pub flavor. Live international sports viewing via satellite includes soccer, rugby and hurling. Live bands entertain to a lively crowd on weekends. The mainstream pub fare menu ranges from grilled sandwiches and fish & chips to traditional Irish dishes and innovative daily specials. At the Kinvara, you'll enjoy a true Irish pub experience. Open 11 am - 2am 7 days a week.

Mr. Dooley's Boston Tavern 77 Broad St., Boston, 617-338-5656. Hailed by the Globe as "the gem of the Financial District," Mr. Dooley's is a favorite meeting place for young professionals. The authentic Irish pub with over 13 imported beers on tap has been voted "Boston's Best Burgers" and "Best Cheap Eats." Open daily until 2am, featuring live bands every Fri. through Sun. night. "A great place for a pint and a chat."

ALL THAT WAS MISSING WAS A CHOPPED LIVER BUST OF FREDERICK LAW OLMSTED...

The first big black-tie blowout of the season took place under a tent that resembled Bozo's Big Top, erected on the Boston Common and packed to the proverbial rafters with tanned and relaxed–looking socialites fresh from their summer haunts.

The Emerald Necklace Ball, which raises money for the city's parks, was hosted by Hizzonah Tom and the delightful Angela Menino, and it attracted the likes of banking bigwigs Carol and Bernie Fulp; the toothsome WCVB-TV anchor duo of Liz Brunner and Anthony Everett (the evening's emcees); their boss, Channel 5 poobah Paul LaCamera with the lovely Mimi; Brahmin do-gooder Henry Lee; peripatetic party pair Natalie Gardiner and John Hambright; MassArt heartthrob Richard MacMillan; the incomparable Peggy and Dick Dray; florist to the rich and famous Bill Rouvalis; Back Bay fashion plate Simone Dodge; super-suave city councilor Mike Ross, squiring Red Sox back-office babe Colleen Reilly; tourist trolley magnate Sean Ford; über mover and shaker Wendy Shattuck; Parks Commissioner Antonia Pollak and others of an equally impressive ilk.

Following cocktails and hors d'oeuvres, dinner and dancing took place on the same spot where our colonial forebears grazed their livestock—a historical observation that prompted one guest to gesture at the tuxedo-clad crowd and crack, "From sheep to penguins in just 300 years."

However, the evening's most amusing comment came from a couple passing by outside, who were overheard speculating on the reason for the tent.

"Maybe a wedding," said the woman.

"Or a bar mitzvah," said the man. "I hear they're getting really elaborate these days."

TALLY HO!...

It was like a Ralph Lauren ad come to life when Fidelity Investments hosted the Jumper Classic Grand Prix on Schooling Field in South Hamilton.

The predominantly blond North Shore horsey set gathered on a gorgeous Sunday afternoon to sip Laurent Perrier and nibble finger food while watching top riders from all over the world compete in the $50,000 event.

Prominent among the throng were such dazzling and delightful types as the event's organizer, Melissa Lovasco; ubiquitous fun couple Mike and Carolyn Rodeno; gorgeous blonde equestrian Stacy Arani and her equally stunning pal, Amy Carroll; Bahama-bred hottie Eric Wiberg; North Shore playboy Cameron Clark; former mistress of the Norfolk Hunt Cary Glass; the naturally carbonated Doreen Corkin with her ruggedly handsome main squeeze, Chris Mitchum (son of Hollywood legend Robert); private-jet guy Reid Oslin; WBCN's babe-alicious redhead Liza Meneades; the hale and hearty Rodney O'Connor (sporting a red hunting jacket); tall, dark and handsome Brian Renaud; a guy in green go-to-hell pants, lots of women wearing elaborate hats, and one plastic surgeon who couldn't resist telling a pretty, blond twentysomething that she might benefit from Botox, effectively ruining her afternoon.

Everyone else seemed to enjoy themselves immensely, though. Especially those who turned their attention from the horses and riders to the more competitive sport of fashion criticism.

"Isn't no white after Labor Day still a rule?" asked one woman archly.

"I can't believe anyone who owns a mirror would wear that hat," said another.

A third, meanwhile, took one look at man wearing blindingly yellow pants an muttered, "All I can say is, thank God fo Champagne." iB

Go ahead. Admire our leathers that are tanned to a soft, mellow hand. Notice the rich color that's dyed throughout the hide – not "painted" on the surface. Beneath this supple skin, we use heavy eight-gauge steel serpentine springs instead of eight-way hand-tied springs that are as outdated as typewriters. For unmatched structural integrity, we use kiln-dried hardwood frames that are ingeniously reinforced. And because we're obsessed with comfort, we design cushions that cradle you in soft, lasting luxury. READING AND WRITING

Pretty much every IMPROPER staffer who met or talked to this issue's cover model, New Yorker writer Susan Orlean, came away raving about how cool she is—candid, down-to-earth and kind. Forming our own unofficial Orlean fan club, we're now reading her new book (and other books she likes) and feeling puffed up about having the writer The Washington Post called a national treasure appear on our Literary Issue's cover. You can learn about Orlean and how she came to Boston in her interview with Jonathan Soroff (page 18).

Orlean served as the judge for our annual fiction contest too, reading the semifinalists and selecting the winner. William Orem's very funny story, "Dark Reckoning," begins on page 24.

Three feature stories delve further into Boston's exceptional literary community, looking at the city's flourishing mystery-writing scene; four local writers with highly anticipated new books; and eight recent books on Boston itself. We hope you find a few to add to your fall reading list.

IRONIC ART

It was amusing, in a rather pathetic way, to read Art Spiegelman's confession to Jessica Iredale (Inner View, Sept. 22): "I don't know any Republicans." Rather like the country-club hostess of half a century ago who didn't know any Jews…or so she thought.

I'll bet Spiegelman knows quite a few Republicans, but they're rightly afraid to come out of the closet in "the dark blue heart of the blue zone," as he calls Manhattan. Not that I needed confirmation, but it's obvious the Isle of Idiotarians hasn't changed much since the days of Pauline "But nobody I know voted for Nixon!" Kael.

On the other hand, it's truly sad to see Spiegelman squander all the moral capital he built with the masterpiece called Maus on yet another piece of detritus frothing with hatred of Bush, the GOP, economic responsibility and all things military. As if the market weren't already glutted with them. And as if Spiegelman's talents didn't exponentially outweigh those of Michael Moore.

But, finally, it's ironic. Had the "peace activists" of the 1930s and '40s had their way, the U.S. wouldn't have stood up to Hitler, but striven to appease him, as did every European country he rolled through. And Spiegelman's parents never would have emerged from the death chambers alive... nor gone on to have their son.

AN EXCELLENT DRIVER

…ks very much for your guide to …ding in ("Eight Simple Steps to … a Bostonian," Sept. 8). I just …ed to Boston from Arizona and I …ven't enjoyed that feeling of being in unfamiliar surroundings. Why the hell can't I buy beer with my groceries on Sunday? Or why is it that Red Sox fans waste so much energy hating the Yankees when they could shower their team with more affection? But the one tip that really made me feel like I'm starting to "belong" was the one about driving.

The other night, my wife and I were having dinner with family friends who've lived here for decades. They asked us what we'd visited, what we'd seen and if we had any questions about settling in. Finally, the wife of the pair asked: "What real Boston things have you done today?"

After a brief pause for thought, I said, "Well, I honked at someone."

CONTRIBUTORS

WILLIAM OREM

Fiction contest winner William Orem won the Great Lakes Colleges Association's New Writer's Award—previously given to Louise Erdrich, Alice Munro, Richard Ford and Sherman Alexie—for his first collection of stories, Zombi, You My Love. His poetry and fiction have appeared in more than 50 publications, including the Alaska Quarterly Review, Sou'wester and the Princeton Arts Review, and he's twice been nominated for the Pushcart Prize.

His story, "Dark Reckoning," is from a collection of comedies that he's currently working on. It was selected by cover star Susan Orlean from among a host of entries. For taking the prize, Orem receives two tickets to The Taming of the Shrew from Boston Ballet; a weekend stay in a Charles Hotel suite, with breakfast for two at Henrietta's Table; a $30 gift certificate from Unicorn Books; two tickets to R.E.M. from Tea Party Concerts; two tickets from the Comedy Connection to see Tommy Davidson; three new best sellers from Barnes & Noble Booksellers in the Prudential Center; and a Chocolate Madness gift basket from Beacon Hill Baskets. Orem lives in Waltham and wishes he had an agent. "Dark Reckoning" begins on page 24.

JAN BROGAN

Jan Brogan, a freelance journalist and former newspaper reporter, is the author of Final Copy, a Boston-based mystery that won the Editor's Choice Award from the Drood Review of Mystery.

A member of both Sisters in Crime/New England and Mystery Writers of America, Brogan is a frequent speaker on the local mystery circuit and will moderate a panel on true crime at the upcoming New England Crime Bake mystery conference in Tewksbury.

Brogan's new novel, A Confidential Source, explores murder and corruption in Rhode Island. Published by Mysterious Press (Warner Books), it hits shelves in April 2005. Her article on Boston mystery writers, "Crime Scene," begins on page 20.

STEAKSMITHS

Everything about Smith & Wollensky, the swank new steakhouse in the medieval Armory building on Arlington Street, is grandiose. Sure, steakhouses are known for their country club–like atmosphere and bold portions, but S&W has taken it all to a new level—or four, for that matter. The New York–based chain opened its 11th restaurant—a palatial four floor, 20,000 square foot space—September 20 in what was once the Boston headquarters for the Armory of the First Corps of Cadets.

The restaurant is sort of a castle-within-a-castle, as the many dining rooms are walled off from the part of the castle that the Park Plaza still operates. The main dining room is on the first floor, which used to house the social hall, and there are a smattering of smaller, cozier dining rooms, most with their own fireplaces. Each room still has the trimmings of the original 1891 armory—complete with soaring ceilings, intricate woodwork and cabinets and wrought iron ornamentation.

Happily, the luxurious premises don't necessarily mean luxury prices. But they do mean fantastic portions. S&W's signature split pea soup goes for $6; a side of creamed spinach for two (dished onto your plate from its own little pot by multiple waiters) is $8; the side of creamy (and very garlicky) truffled macaroni and cheese ($10) is delectable, and the whole free-range lemon pepper chicken ($19), moist and juicy, is big enough for three meals. Seafood lovers will delight in the range of surf options, including angry shrimp ($28) and lobsters of three to 13 pounds.

Of course, the specialty is steak, from sirloin ($34 for 14 oz.) to prime rib ($37) to filet mignon ($33 for 10 oz). Smith & Wollensky is one of the only steakhouses that dry-ages prime beef in-house—a process that takes at least 21 days and involves strict regulation of temperature, humidity and air movement. To accompany the tender, flavorful steaks, S&W's "Great American Wine List" consists of 650 wines, all produced in the U.S. You likely won't be able to eat dessert, but you should consider takeout. Slices of carrot cake and chocolate cake are nearly as big as a newborn. 110 Arlington St., Boston (617-423-1112). —E.H.

QUOTERBACKS

Just when we thought "Cowboy Up" was on its last legs, Kevin Millar brought back the motto of a season we'd all rather forget when he unveiled Sox T-shirts last month reading "Tell 'em we're coming, and hell is coming with us… Cowboy Up." The quote, taken in part from a scene in Tombstone, got us thinking about some movie quotes to sum up the state of our other professional franchises. Here's what we got:

Patriots–Kill Bill Vol. 2

Black Mamba: "I've killed a hell of a lot of people to get to this point, but I have only one more. The last one. And when I arrive at my destination, I am gonna kill Bill"

Figuratively speaking, which NFL team out there doesn't want to be the first to take down Bill Belichick and his troops? But unlike the movie, we're not sure our Bill will ever fall. Well, at least not until he's got a ring for every finger.

Bruins–There's Something About Mary

Cop: "What...the hell...were you thinking! How the hell d'ya get the zipper all the way to the top?"

Just when we thought that the NHL had done everything to turn people away from hockey, they did the unimaginable and locked out their players, all but ending the season and alienating any fans they had left. Much like Ben Stiller's character, they'll be feeling this one for a while.

Celtics–Forrest Gump

Forrest: "Stupid is as stupid does."

Tom Hanks may have won an Oscar for his portrayal of Forrest Gump, but we think that if given the opportunity, Danny Ainge could at least have taken home a Golden Globe. He may have landed us a decent coach, but we still think it's about time for Danny to load up the old shrimpin' boat and head for warmer climes. —Rich Levine inner view

SUSIE ESSMAN

Via her deadpan delivery of four-letter invectives, Susie Essman has created one of cable's most entertaining characters in Curb Your Enthusiasm's hotheaded housewife Susie Greene. When she's not cursing out her husband and his four-eyed friend Larry David on Curb, the New York native returns to her roots in stand-up comedy. She'll appear at the Comedy Connection October 8 and 9.

IB: How did you get into comedy?

SE: I was waitressing and in order to make the job bearable to myself, I used to go in the kitchen and just imitate all the customers and make everybody laugh, and basically entertain myself. It was my fellow waiters who forced me to get up on stage.

IB: How did you get cast on Curb Your Enthusiasm*?*

SE: Larry saw me on the Friars Club roast of Jerry Stiller on Comedy Central. He had a scene in mind for the first season where Jeff brings a Fresh Air Fund kid home and the kid robs us blind, completely destroys our house, and I'm just verbally abusing Jeff. And when he saw me do the Friars Roast, he thought, in his words, "Boy, what a mouth on this girl." So he called me and asked me if I wanted the job.

IB: Is Larry the same off camera as he is on?

SE: No. My impression is that kind of jerky character that he is on camera is stuff that he thinks but in real life doesn't act on. And also you have to kind of of consider, if he actually behaved like that character, would he have been able to be the executive producer for the most successful show in the history of television for all those years? Probably not.

IB: What's your favorite Curb Your Enthusiasm episode?

SE: The Doll. I think it's one of the most perfect half hours of comedy ever conceived.

IB: Susie is one of the show's most popular characters. What do you think makes her so endearing?

SE: That she so completely embraces her anger and doesn't question it at all. It gives them permission. I can't tell you how many married women come up to me and tell me that Susie Greene is their idol because they wish they could speak to their husbands the way she speaks to hers, which is kind of a sad commentary on marriage. But Susie Greene yelling and screaming at Jeff and Larry somehow is liberating for a lot of women out there.

IB: Are people afraid of pissing you off now that they've seen how angry you can get on the show?

SE: It actually works very well for me because people are definitely afraid of me, and it comes in handy.

IB: Do Larry and Jeff ever get upset when you call them fat, four-eyed f---s?

SE: I don't do it off camera. If I was yelling and screaming at them and treating them that way off camera, I'm sure I'd get upset and I'm not sure I'd have a job. They laugh. They ruin half my takes whenever I yell at them. Especially Larry. He just breaks up.

IB: Will we see Susie Greene in your stand-up act?

SE: She rears her ugly head now and then, but my stand-up act is actually similar to Curb in the content. It's not a PG rated show. Leave the kids at home. One of my favorite subjects is sex.

IL PANINO REINCARNATION

Umbria-lievable... When restaurant and Financial District late-night hot spot Il Panino closed its doors in August, there was a lot of buzz around what owner Frank de Pasquale had up his sleeve. On October 7, we'll all find out, when the space at 295 Franklin Street reopens as Umbria. The five-floor establishment will become New England's first restaurant to build its entire menu around ingredients from Italy's Umbria region. It features a mezzanine for private functions, a third-floor lounge with bottle service and a two-level nightclub (that will serve more than 150 brands of vodka) where you can dance off that Italian fare and then go back for round two. 295 Franklin St., Boston (617-338-1000).

Sibling Ventures... If yours is one of the many mouths made happy by Hanover Street's upscale eatery Trattoria a Scalinatella, you'll likely join Via Valverde's fan club too. Scalinatella owner Paolo Diecidue opened Valverde two doors down from his original joint in late July. In addition to chef Dan DeCarpis' authentic Italian menu and the largest half-bottle Italian wine selection in the city, Diecidue's newest venture features a romantic, candlelit wine bar/lounge with elegant settees, a formal dining room upstairs and a state-of-the-art wine cellar/cave with private seating for six. 233 Hanover St., Boston (617-742-8240).

Rustic Rumblings... It's been a pretty eventful year for the gang over at the Rustic Kitchen. Aside from the recent opening of two new locations, the Kitchen has announced the launch of a private wine label. Last January, chef Bill Bradley made a trip to Napa to meet with old friend Jim Allen, owner of the Sequoia Grove Vineyards. The two created about a dozen blends that were tested by the Rustic crew, and the unanimous choice was an 85 percent cabernet, 9 percent merlot and 6 percent syrah blend that will run about $40 a bottle. What could be next for the Rustic Kitchen crew? A lunch box? A Pez dispenser? Stay tuned. —E.H., J.I and R.L.

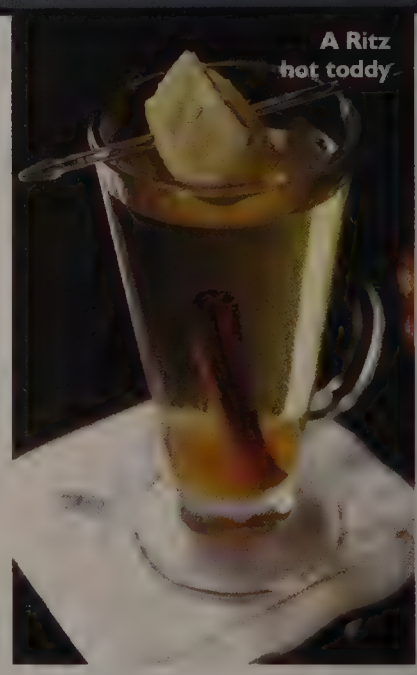
YUM YUM



A year and a half ago, when 22-year-old Hull native Johnny Earle was working at Newbury Comics as well as a silk-screen company, his friends gave him the nickname Johnny Cupcakes. It turned out to be more than a nickname. Earle silkscreened a cupcake onto a T-shirt, wore it to work and found that people loved the sweet design. He started selling them out of the trunk of his car, and since then, he's taken his T's to outlets like Harvard Square's Hootenanny, and Stil on Newbury Street, and they've gained a following all over the country. Steve-O from Jackass was seen on Howard Stern's E! Network show wearing a Johnny Cupcakes shirt, and Britney Spears wore one during a show in Europe. You can meet Earle by booking a "cup perwear" party, in which he comes to your house and sets up shirts for you and your friends to buy. The host, of course, gets a couple of free shirts. www.johnnycupcakes.com. $18–$38. —Samantha House

The Littlest Bar: Hot Whiskey
47 Province St., Boston (617-523-9766).
Escape the cold (and maybe a little bit of reality) with authentic hot whiskey (a few shots of booze mixed with boiling water, sugar, cloves and lemon slices) at this downtown Irish bar. The Littlest also offers a hot port drink, which is a rich mixture of sugar, water and port. Ahhh, alcohol, nature's space heater. (Both $5.95 for an 8 oz. drink.)

Grendel's Restaurant and Bar: Hot Cider
89 Winthrop St., Cambridge (617-491-1160).
Simmered daily by the staff, Grendel's cider ($2.95) includes cloves that give your boiling hot drink a little extra warmth. Bartenders will also add a touch of dark rum ($4.75) and a cinnamon stick.

Burdick Chocolate Café: Hot Chocolate
52-D Brattle St., Cambridge (617-491-4340).
No powder or syrup here. To make this one-of-a-kind libation, Burdick uses the highest-quality chocolate melted into boiling hot milk. The resulting concoction is hands-down the best hot chocolate in town ($4).

The Bar at the Ritz-Carlton Boston: Hot Toddy
15 Arlington St., Boston (617-536-5700).
They don't come cheap, but the Ritz's warm winter drinks are worth the indulgence. The hot toddy ($12) blends brandy, honey, fresh lemon and boiling water. Another favorite is the raspberry truffle ($13), a hot blend of Chambord and homemade hot cocoa with whipped cream. —R.L.

Opal Opening... Planning a night on the town in Boston can drive you mad. Lounge or club? Live music or DJ? Dress up or keep it cas? In an attempt to satisfy all options, Bryan Huck and Tyrone Croom have opened up the Opal Lounge. The two-floor Downtown Crossing bar, which opened September 17, combines the laid-back atmosphere of a lounge (plush furniture, live bands and exotic drinks) with the liveliness of a club (DJs spinning nightly). "Boston is such a great, diverse city and our goal is to spread that diversity into the nightlife scene," Croom says. 48 Winter St., Boston (617-482-6725). www.opalboston.com.

Open Studios... If you've dominated the karaoke circuit and are looking to further indulge your exhibitionist side, Limelight Stage and Studios is equipped to bring your singing dreams closer to reality. The new entertainment venue, which opened near Emerson in mid-October, rents out studio and stage space by the hour to those who want to record their own CD or rock video of songs from its library of 5,000 karaoke-style backing tracks. Limelight offers aspiring performers vocal lessons and the chance to meet those with the same musical interests, and the six studios and mainstage are available for group parties. 204 Tremont St., Boston (617-423-0785). www.limelightboston.com.

Book Ends... In September, Wordsworth Books shocked many a Cambridge bibliophile by filing for Chapter 11 bankruptcy. The store is still up and running, but its future is uncertain. "Unless we find some sort of angel donation, we'll probably be closed by the end of October," says owner Hillel Stavis. While Cambridge bids a sad farewell to the literary landmark, a group of intrepid bookworms starts a new venture. Last January, Dale Szczeblowski, Jane Dawson and Carol Stoltz departed the Concord Bookshop, and by the next week they were making plans to open their own store. They're set to launch Porter Square Books in the Porter Square Shopping Center this month. The store is about 4,500 square feet and will house a diverse array of books.

A Moving Story... To put it bluntly, moving stinks. The worst part about it is accidentally turning your prized possessions into chipped pieces of crap. Now, moving whizzes Gentle Giant Moving Co. have assembled the Gentle Giant Restoration and Conservation team. This new branch, led by master conservator Tara Deegan Parmenter, will do everything from repairing and refurbishing furniture, stone, plaster and marble to rebuilding frames and conserving paintings. We'd say they'll do everything but the kitchen sink, but they'd do that too. (617-661-3333). www.gentlegiant.com.

Heidi Klum

Mall Madness... Most would agree that waiting in a mile-long line at a mall is up there with waiting for a root canal. But put Heidi Klum at the beginning of that line—or behind the drill—and it's like a remake of Hands on Hard Body. At least that's what Victoria's Secret hopes. VS recently declared Boston one of the sexiest cities, and to celebrate (and no doubt promote the recent redesign of 16 local stores) the lingerie powerhouse brings in the leggy supermodel to sign autographs at Copley Place October 18 from 12–2 pm. Be advised, if you want to say hi to Heidi, you'd better get there early—the line may start forming around 6 am. —E.H., J.I. and R.L.

I'VE GOT ISSUES

A few things to consider as you head to the voting booth next month.

President-electin' day is fast approaching and I think now is the time to talk about the topics the candidates need to address to get my vote. I'm an educated voter, and I'm not going to punch one ticket or the other just because I like one of their neckties. Ohhh! Kerry's wearing a red tie today! That looks really presidential! I'm voting for him! Unless... Bush squints and says something really tough. You see, I'm what's known as a swing voter, which means that my girlfriend and I like to get together and have sex with other people who can't make up their minds. But here are the issues that could sway me one way or the other.

Health Care

I demand a bill that will prevent people from coming into work sick and saying "It's OK—I'm not contagious. I was contagious, like, two weeks ago." What, you're a lab technician? Before you left the house this morning, you took a throat culture, put it in a petri dish and determined that the festival of microscopic organisms surfing out on your every breath is not attacking my immune system this very instant? This is how the plague spread in Europe—everyone going around saying "Oh, I was a bit bubonicky last week, but you can't catch it now."

Male violators convicted of claiming noncontagious status will be made to grow facial hair like Kevin Federline (a.k.a. Mr. Britney Spears) and wear it that way for a period of six months. They will also have to wear a Yankees cap askew on their heads to complete the pubic humiliation inherent in trying to look like Kevin Federline. Female violators will either walk three miles in heels over cobblestones or give John Madden a sponge bath. Who's with me on this, besides John Madden?

Assault Rifles

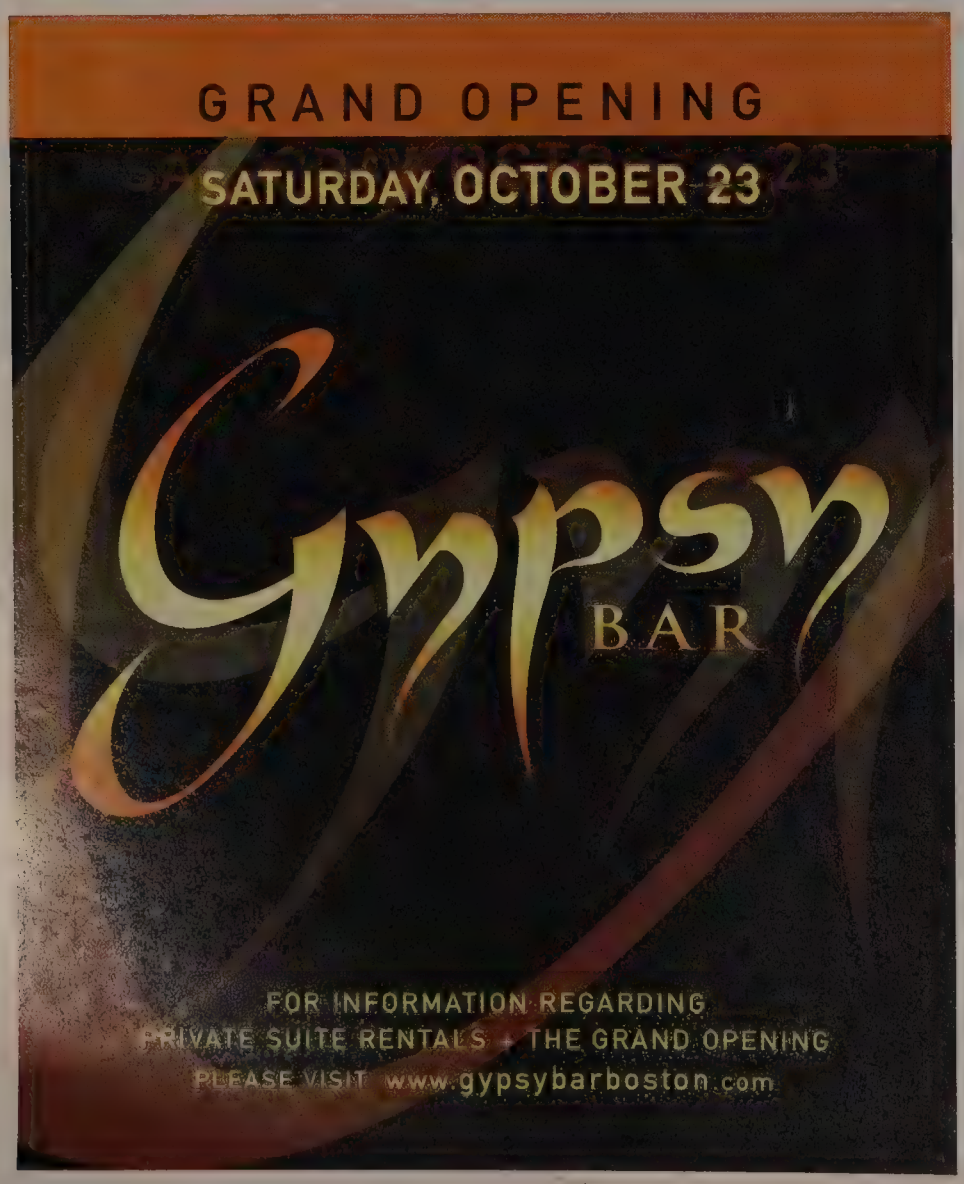
Assault rifles are certainly dangerous, but I think the antigun people are taking things a little too far with the 150-foot-long one mounted next to the Mass Pike outside of Fenway. The sign next to it says "Coming to a home near you." That's just ridiculous—that thing wouldn't even come close to fitting in my apartment. Maybe if you took out the banana clip and folded the stock it would fit sort of diagonally, with the barrel sticking out into the hallway, but I really feel like I have better things to worry about than gangs getting their hands on giant AK-47s. In fact, perhaps the answer is to allow assault weapons, but only if they're 150 feet long, which would make them extremely difficult to conceal. I'll also mention that the assault rifle ban has been hard on rappers named after assault rifles, notably Mack 10, who hasn't come out with anything noteworthy since the Friday soundtrack. So you know somebody's losing Mack 10's vote, assuming he's allowed to vote.

The Economy

Frankly, I'm nervous about both candidates' position on the economy. While I think Kerry's plan to have the U.S. Treasury marry a rich heiress sounds intriguing, I'm not sure it will work. I mean, what if she secretly changes her will and leaves everything to the cabana boy? It happened to Argentina. On the other hand, Bush's plan to cut taxes, run up a huge national deficit and keep transferring the balance to lower-interest cards sounds like it could work. And the U.S. hasn't even tapped into its home equity line of credit yet, which must be pretty solid given that the Louisiana Purchase and Yellowstone and stuff like that was paid off a long time ago.

I'M A SWING VOTER WHICH MEANS THAT MY GIRLFRIEND AND I LIKE TO GET TOGETHER AND HAVE SEX WITH OTHER PEOPLE WHO CAN'T MAKE UP THEIR MINDS.

Cloning



I believe cloning is wrong, an opinion that was formed after watching Multiplicity, the Farenheit 9/11 of cloning. This film chronicles what happened when Michael Keaton made a clone of himself to help out with his hectic schedule. First it went smoothly, but then the clone cloned himself, and the second clone came out retarded because copies of copies aren't as sharp as the original. Then the retarded clone slept with Andie MacDowell, Keaton's wife, and he was much better in the sack than Keaton was. You can see how this is a Pandora's box fraught with moral dilemmas and hilarious hijinks. So I'm with whoever bans cloning—provided, that is, they leave the Bundchen Clause intact.

YOU THINK THAT'S FUNNY?

Football can't compete with fall baseball in Boston... Brady still underrated...Celtics still a project team

I was tailgating at the Boston College-UConn football game September 17, the night of the Red Sox comeback win over the Yankees. And like thousands of others in Chestnut Hill that evening, I never made it into the football game, preferring to tailgate with the baseball game on. I found it interesting that BC's all-time leading rusher Derek Knight was feeling the Red Sox' energy as well. He never went into the football game either. Lets face it; following the Red Sox is an addiction.

There are reasons every year why the Sox will finally win, or at least we like to make believe there are. But something feels different this time. (Yes, I've said that before too). This year the Sox enter October with more pitching than they've ever had. They really are as good, if not better, than the Yankees, at least on paper. When's the last time you've been able to munch on your Fenway Frank and say that? But even if the Sox disappoint us again, we'll be back on the ticket hunt next spring, because that's what we do in New England. Win or lose, we love the Red Sox.

Stop the debate. Need we discuss which quarterback—Peyton Manning, Steve McNair, Donovan McNabb or Tom Brady—is the best in the NFL? Folks, it's Tom Brady, hands down.

As for following the Patriots, it's not quite an addiction—it's actually very relaxing. Nothing seems to go wrong anymore. We can credit Brady and his calming influence for that. He's guided the Patriots to two Super Bowl titles while copping two Super Bowl MVP trips to Disney World, yet we still have to debate how good he really is.

We're wasting our carbon-dioxide. Brady is the best, with win after win after win to prove it. This isn't rotisserie football we're talking about, where Brady's statistics don't cut it. This is a win-loss business. If you win, you have a job. If you lose, your job is in jeopardy.

I talk to Brady about once or twice a week, and despite the endorsements, the dates with actresses, and most importantly defending a Super Bowl championship, he's avoided becoming self-absorbed, never neglecting to ask how I'm doing. The guy who literally has to change his cell phone number monthly because so many people want so many different things from him remains just one of the boys. It's still hard to believe this guy was the 199th player chosen in the 2000 NFL Draft. He'll go down as the biggest steal in Patriots—and maybe NFL—history.

I ran into Celtics co-owner Wyc Grousbeck at a Boston restaurant recently, and he couldn't wait to tell me how impressed he was when he walked into the team's training facility a month before the start of training camp. What he witnessed was 12 players under contract, already back and working hard to prepare for the upcoming season.

Sadly enough, the Green Team's early commitment may be the highlight of the season. Danny Ainge's plan is still a long way from achieving anything more than mediocrity. From my perspective, the only turn for the good this off-season was the signing of big man Mark Blount. It's easily the best move Ainge has made, especially considering that Blount, along with Celtic swingman Walter McCarty, is one of the two classiest guys in the NBA.

It appeared Blount and Ainge were headed for a bitter divorce after the team was abruptly dismantled and Blount's mentor, Jim O'Brien, was let go as coach. But Ainge made nice with Blount, offering him $41 million over six years. Blount, who was one of the NBA's most improved players last season, was second in the league in field goal percentage. And in the second half of the season he was an automatic double-digits in points and rebounds. Absolutely driven to succeed, he's one of the most committed athletes I've met in any sport. With that said, however, Paul Pierce and Mark Blount don't make a basketball team. It's a good start but hardly the end all.

> IT'S HARD TO BELIEVE BRADY WAS THE 199TH PICK IN THE 2000 NFL DRAFT. HE'LL GO DOWN AS THE BIGGEST STEAL IN PATRIOTS—AND MAYBE NFL—HISTORY

The Dan Plan remains incomplete and is still potentially a disaster-in-waiting, but for one signing, Ainge definitely made like Spike Lee and did the right thing. iB

LEONARDO LOCASCIO SELECTIONS

SUSAN ORLEAN

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPH BY PETER URBAN

Best-selling author and New Yorker staff writer Susan Orlean, 48, was born and raised outside Cleveland, Ohio, and received her B.A. wit honors from the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor in 1976. After living in Oregon for several years, she moved to Boston in 1982 an worked as a columnist, first for the Boston Phoenix, then at the Boston Globe Magazine. In 1986, she moved to New York and began writing fo such publications as the New York Times Magazine, Spy, Esquire and Outside, and she worked as a contributing editor at Rolling Stone and Vogue. After penning articles and Talk of the Town pieces for the New Yorker, she became a staff writer in 1992, covering popular culture and writing profiles and "Reporter at Large" pieces. Her books include the best-seller The Orchid Thief, which was made into the Oscar-winning movie Adaptation, as well as The Bullfighter Checks Her Makeup: My Encounters with Extraordinary People, Red Sox and Blue Fish and Saturday Night. Her new book, My Kind of Place: Travel Stories from a Woman Who's Been Everywhere, will be published next month. She and her husband, an investment banker, divide their time between Boston and New York and are expecting their first child.

Jonathan Soroff: So do you consider yourself a New Yorker or a Bostonian?
Susan Orlean: Well, my feeling is you live wherever your shoes are, and the bulk of my shoes are in Boston.
JS: Is The New Yorker the greatest magazine in the English language?
SO: Except for the few really prime years of Mad magazine, yes. I do believe that. There are lots of good magazines, but The New Yorker is in a class by itself.
JS: *So which was more fun to work for—*Vogue or Rolling Stone*?*
SO: Well, the clothes that you get to borrow when you work for Vogue are far superior, but working for Rolling Stone is like the ultimate backstage pass. I so enjoyed my years as a Bon Jovi groupie. Being able to casually toss off that I traveled with this band or was backstage with that band, you get great music industry bragging rights.
JS: You wrote The Orchid Thief originally as a piece in The New Yorker, then expanded it into a book. Did you ever expect it to be as huge as it became?
SO: Never. To begin with, I wasn't even sure The New Yorker would let me do it. How can you truly argue that a story about a toothless orchid poacher was news that needed to be told?
JS: How'd you come across his story?
SO: A complete accident. I was flying home from Mexico and I'd run out of things to read, and I did the daring and ill-advised thing of reaching into the seat pocket in front of me. Someone had left a Miami Herald, and I came across this little story about the arrest of this crackpot and his crew of Seminoles, and I thought, "That's such a weird story." But the leap of being in seat 15-D with someone's leftover Miami Herald to where it went—a book, a movie—was inconceivable. And all along the way I had to preface everything by saying, "I know this sounds weird, but…"
JS: Strangest assignment of your career as a reporter?
SO: Oh, God, it's hard to choose. But one of my claims to fame, and the thing that made me a hero among the secretaries at The New Yorker was that I had a one-day role on All My Children. I played a nurse, and I had one line: "Visiting hours are over." I recently got a paycheck for about $2.19 in residuals because apparently that episode aired in Uruguay or something.
JS: You're the master of capturing subcultures. What's the strangest one you've encountered?
SO: The taxidermy convention would certainly be in the running. That was one where I did feel I'd entered an alternate universe. It was completely surreal. The most bizarre part was a coyote that looked completely normal until you got to the middle of its back, where the skin was sort of flayed open, and there was a little bronze model of the World Trade Center collapsing, with firemen and rubble. It was inexpressibly strange.
JS: How about a story you started but couldn't finish?
SO: It hasn't happened that often. What does happen is I come up with a million ideas and then become disenchanted with them before I even begin, so the ones that make it through my commitment problem I'm usually determined to do, regardless of how impossible they seem.

"I HAVE A LITTLE BIT OF A MISSIONARY IMPULSE, LIKE, 'I WILL MAKE YOU CARE ABOUT SOMETHING YOU NEVER THOUGHT YOU COULD CARE ABOUT.' I THINK I HAVE A LITTLE BIT OF THE PREACHER IN ME."

JS: Like?
SO: When I was doing The Bullfighter Checks Her Makeup, I arrived in Spain to interview Cristina Sanchez only to discover that the guy who had been representing himself to me as her agent was essentially an imposter, and she had never heard of me and had no willingness to do it. The photographer turned around and left, but I stuck it out. I thought, "Goddammit, I'm gonna do this story if it kills me."
JS: If you could have written one thing in history, what would it be and why?
SO: The Rand McNally Road Atlas, because I'd be really rich. Second to that? Probably The Odyssey, because it forms the basis for so much that came after.
JS: And because Brad Pitt's ass would have had a starring role in the movie version?
SO: Well, that's between you and me.
JS: Greatest accolade you've ever received?
SO: My husband telling me that I looked good first thing in the morning. Besides that? As far as my work goes, and I get teased for it all the time, The Washington Post called me a national treasure.
JS: If you were on a deserted island and could only bring three books, what would they be?
SO: Faulkner's The Sound and the Fury and James Joyce's Ulysses, because I think you can read them both again and again and again. For the third, it'd be a toss-up between my favorite book as a child, which was a collection of jokes called A Barrel Full of Monkeys, and the Rand McNally Road Atlas.
JS: Word you use most often?
SO: I must confess, I'll often develop a fetish for somehow crowbarring a certain word into my writing. For a long time, was sort of a challenge to see if I could g the word "underpants" into a story. The once I achieved that, it became "tub socks," which was actually harder. B someone told me recently that I use th word weird a lot.
JS: One quality of a great writer?
SO: Empathy…and really good typing.
JS: One adjective to describe seeing Meryl Streep portray you in Adaptation*?*
SO: Weird. [Laughs.] Completely unrea The idea that they'd have real actors wi SAG cards seemed inconceivable, so wh they said Meryl Streep, I thought, "Tha the most absurd thing I've ever heard." took a while to register.
JS: Did you feel that movie was more about Hollywood than about your book?
SO: I think it was an interesting teete totter between the two. It was certain very much about creativity within t strange bell jar of Hollywood, balanc against the idea of trying to write a bo and that whole process.
JS: It wasn't the most obvious thing to turn into a movie.
SO: I thought they were insane all alon It was so eccentric and the form and to were not what you'd think would mak good story for a movie.
JS: Favorite thing about being a writer?
SO: I'm curious, and I'm a good explor and I love language. I have a little bit o missionary impulse, like, "I will make y care about something you never thoug you could care about." I think I have a l tle bit of the preacher in me.
JS: Least favorite?
SO: The loneliness. In many ways, picked the wrong profession, because I li collaborating, I love the feeling of being a team. What irony that I've chosen so thing that has none of that.
JS: Which do you enjoy more: the footwor of researching a story or sitting down to write it?
SO: Well, it's like I have two totally diff ent jobs that have nothing to do with ea other. It's sort of like the difference b tween going out to a quarry and findin piece of raw stone, then taking it back your studio to sculpt it.
JS: Ever get writer's block?

): No, thank God. It doesn't always flow e honey, but I've never completely lled.

: Do you have any writing rituals or erstitions?

): I'm not a fetishist. I don't need to be ting in the northeast corner of the room aring my grandfather's hunting shirt. n pretty flexible. I've written in lots of ferent environments, and in fact, I ote a lot of The Orchid Thief while I was veling.

If you weren't a writer, what would you do?

): [Laughs.] Well, given the skills that I ve, I'd probably be a typist. I narrowly dged the curse of law school, and had I t had the gumption to pursue writing, at's probably what I'd be doing, and I'm e I'd be miserable.

Anything you'd never write about?

): I'm not crazy about writing about my-f. The whole memoir thing. I kinda nge at that, and when I've been asked to that kind of thing, I suddenly get hard of aring.

So I guess the world won't be reading ut what it's like to be pregnant at 48?

): I hardly think so. I don't like writing it, I don't really like reading it. I don't e that confessional streak. I've already n asked to write about motherhood, and hought it was quite funny, because I ote back, "I'm only seven months preg-nt. I'm not exactly an expert."

*Any guilty pleasures when it comes to ding—*Star magazine, or books by Barbara tland or Barbara Taylor Bradford?

): When I fly is when I indulge in esy reading, like People and gossipy k or fashion magazines. I also regularly chase the Weekly World News, to keep on current events like the world's fat-cat giving birth to the world's fattest tens. And then there are the foreign gazines, like Hello!, with these in-depth tures on the tragic divorce of some rd-rank aristocrat or some washed-up time presenter on BBC Two. There's hing more hilarious than trash pop re-tage on people you've never heard of. I read two issues of that in one sitting, I just want more.

Last question: One aspect of popular ure that absolutely mystifies or eludes you?

): Britney Spears. And reality TV. I'm a nd consumer of pop culture, and I love a of things that a lot of so-called intellec-ls would find irritating or mysterious. those two things I just don't get. IB

On a summer Thursday evening, the patio at the Union Street restaurant in Newton is a pick-up scene, filled with twenty-somethings dining alfresco. But in a gathering upstairs in the Attic bar, the atmosphere is just a little darker. The topic of conversation is murder, violence and twisted ideas. Mostly, this dinner crowd of about 35 mystery fans wants to know where the ideas for the books come from.

"Logan Airport," answers author Lynne Heitman, who uses her experience as a former American Airlines general manager at Logan for her aviation mysteries.

Hallie Ephron, who has co-written a series of mystery novels featuring a forensic psychologist sleuth, offers an anecdote about her co-author's real-life patient, who suffered brain damage during an assault that made her memory and testimony questionable. This was the basis for their first novel, Amnesia.

And Chris Mooney, author of Deviant Ways and World Without End, simply shakes his head. "The honest answer is that I don't know."

Seven mystery authors are here at this dinner party co-hosted by Newtonville Books—writers Linda Barnes, Al Blanchard, Dana Cameron and Gary Braver are also in attendance. The conversation with fans begins at cocktail hour at the bar, proceeds through three courses and ends with coffee, dessert and book signings.

WITH SOME 40 PUBLISHED AUTHORS IN THE REGION, BOSTON'S MYSTERY WRITING SCENE IS BOOMING. TAKE IT FROM AN INSIDER.

Sitting at a table with fans during the salad course, Barnes mentions that she's working on a chapter that will transport her protagonist, Carlotta Carlyle, to South America. One reader, Carol Lumm of Waltham, is so familiar with Barnes' work that she can instantly guess the reason. "Oh, to search for the family of her ward?"

Later, Lumm explains that she writes reviews on an AOL mystery message board and is in contact with other fans across the county. "People in other cities are jealous because I get to go to so many events that authors come to," she says. "A lot of authors do events in obvious hubs, like Houston and Chicago, but not everywhere. There are a lot of places where people read mysteries that authors just don't go."

WILLIAM TAPPLY

Tapply was an early member of the local writers' group the Cadavers, so named by mystery grande dame P.D. James.

The restaurant venue is unique, but these kind of multiauthor events take place regularly all over the metropolitan Boston area. Even as a relatively new and unknown mystery author, I've done at least two dozen of them, appearing at bookstores, libraries and the occasional barroom.

The mystery writing community in Boston is strong, both in numbers and in organization. Ephron, president of the New England chapter of Sisters in Crime and a mystery reviewer for The Boston Globe, estimates there are about 40 local mystery authors who've published books. Through organizations like the Mystery Writers of America and Sisters in Crime, these authors sign up to appear at fan events hoping, if not for increased book sales, at least for some exposure.

"It's really important for an author to have personal experience with fans," says Ephron (whose sisters are the writers Nora, Delia and Amy Ephron). "It adds a dimension to the experience if the readers know the author, can hear the voice of someone they already know. And for the author, nothing is more satisfying than meeting a reader face-to-face."

Of course, all authors have their war stories: of driving an hour and a half to a bookstore where only three fans show up; of being mistaken for another, better-known author, etc. But mystery writers are, if nothing else, a practical lot. Many of us get into writing mysteries because we like the structure and concrete research the genre requires. So we soldier on. If the last book didn't exactly take off, maybe the next one will do better. And despite our jealousies—and make no mistake, we envy any author who has a better advance, a better promotional budget or a breakout book—we still band together.

It's this banding together, along with the intense market competition, that makes the mystery scene in Boston so vibrant.

In the early 1980s, the mystery community in Boston was still small and relatively inactive. Barnes, who was launching her career then, says that authors weren't expected to go out and promote themselves by organizing and making personal appearances. "You wrote the book, and the publisher handled everything else," she says.

At the time, Barnes and some other local authors, including Charlotte MacLeod, Bill Tapply, Jane Langton and Jeremiah Healy, formed an informal group that met each month. They brought potluck, offered support and exchanged information about agents and editors. Once, they even co-wrote an installment mystery series for the Boston He ald. The group had no name until British mystery author P.D. James, visiting the are anointed them the Cadavers.

The authors often hung around Kate's Mystery Books, which had recently opened in converted Victorian house on Mass. Ave. in Cambridge. Owner Kate Mattes was st renovating, and Spenser author Robert Parker—already an award-winning writer thou not yet a household name—helped out by installing the corner shelves where she nc stocks trade paperbacks. "They're a little uneven and wobbly," jokes Mattes. "It's goc he can earn a living writing."

The quality of the shelving wouldn't be crucial for Kate's. Good timing was in effe Kate's Mystery Books opened on Friday the 13th in May 1983, around the same tin that Sara Paretsky and Sue Grafton published their first mysteries. Nationally, these ne authors with their popular female private eye protagonists would transform the genre attracting an avalanche of female readers to what was once largely a male bastion. My tery sales and mystery writing began to take off.

Earlier, New York, L.A. and Miami were what Mattes calls the "crime hot spots," t incubators for popular mystery fiction. But by the mid 1980s, "Boston rapidly joined th crowd and put its own unique stamp on it," she says, adding that the many tourists wl visit New England for its revolutionary history provide a ready audience for crime set Boston. The Cadavers authors began making their marks.

By the end of the decade, Bill Tapply, author of 21 mysteries in the Brady Coyne s ries as well as the new Bitch Creek, recalls going to mystery conferences where everyo began to refer to the era as a golden age of mystery. "Mysteries became popular," he sa "Publishers published a lot of them, and a lot more people started writing them."

Kate's became the hub of Boston's mystery universe. Mattes befriended authors, ga them marketing advice and hooked them up with bookstores in other states to schedu signings. The store's central location made it convenient, and its haunted-house mo bestowed mystique. "It developed a certain aura," says Tapply.

As the market boomed nationally and the number of mystery novels published soar to more than 1,000 per year, the competition to break out from the pack increased. A thors realized the need for publicity and organization.

Frustrated by the tiny fraction of reviews and national press they were receiving proportional to their numbers, women in the field began to organize. In 1986, Mattes, who had become a national figure in the mystery world, helped found Sisters in Crime, an organization dedicated to fighting the perceived discrimination against women mystery writers.

A New England chapter formed in the early 1990s and quickly became one of the largest and most active in the country. Focused on promoting female authors, providing networking opportunities and helping aspiring mystery writers, the group would have a huge impact on the Boston scene.

The organization, which also admits men, holds meetings that address practical issues like how to handle dialogue or find an agent or Web designer, and conducts frequent mini-seminars that feature experts in popular topics such as forensics and understanding the criminal mind. But perhaps the most obvious impact has come from the speakers bureau that Kate Flora, author of the Thea Kozak mystery series, developed and runs.

After years of community outreach, Flora now fields almost 40 requests a year for local mystery authors to speak on such topics as "The Modern Heroine," and "Using What You Know to Write a Mystery." The speakers bureau has helped bring published mystery authors to local libraries, state library conferences, bookstores, luncheons, dinner meetings, college clubs, senior citizens' homes, book groups and women's organizations in all six New England states.

Similarly, the local Mystery Writers of America chapter, which is geared more exclusively toward published authors, has become increasingly active in promotion during the last decade. Current president Al Blanchard, who authors the Steve Asher series, plans about 20 author events a year, including the recent Union Street event in the Attic as well as earlier events with Newtonville Books.

It's a testament to just how cooperative mystery authors are that these two organizations, which technically compete in the same market for membership, often work together to co-host events or special projects. These projects include the annual New England Crime Bake, which was the first-ever mystery conference in the region. Now in its third year, it's a two-day affair that draws about 200 authors, would-be authors, agents, editors and fans for panel discussions on topics like forensics, the psychology of crime and how to create a memorable bad guy. Robert Parker keynotes this year's Crime Bake, which takes place November 13 and 14 in Tewksbury.

These organizations have changed the nature of the Boston mystery scene, says Jeremiah Healy, one of the original members of the Cadavers club and author of the John Francis Cuddy series and a separate series of legal thrillers. A guest of honor this year at the mystery world's biggest bash, Bouchercon 2004, Healy is a member of Sisters in Crime, the Mystery Writers of America and numerous other professional writers' organizations.

He explains the transformation this way: "[The scene] morphed from about 30 of us who used to get together for purely social events, with maybe a little discussion about agents, to a more professionally oriented world, where we get together at MWA meetings at Kate's to hear about arson-sniffing dogs who can sniff out a propellant or to hear tax advisers tell us about the business of writing. We still socialize, but are a bit more professional in the event that triggers the socialization."

Mysteries are booming. After a lull in the late 1990s, the genre is once again on the upswing, according to David Jastrow of Simba Information, a market research firm in Connecticut that tracks the publishing industry. He projects mystery book sales of $396 million for 2004, an 11 percent increase since the beginning of the decade.

Jastrow attributes the growth of the genre to the success of television shows like CSI and Law & Order, as well as the enormous success of Dan Brown's The Da Vinci Code. At Newtonville Books, owner Tim Huggins also sees the increased interest in mysteries sparked by popular crossover books like The Da Vinci Code and Dennis Lehane's Mystic River. "A popular film or big book can pull people into the genre," he says. "It moves in waves, stimulates the market."

The genre's renewed popularity has also spawned two recent local forays into publishing. Susan Oleksiw, author of the Mellingham mystery series and former editor and co-founder of the now defunct Larcom Press in Beverly, has teamed up with Kate Flora to create Level Best Books. This company publishes a yearly anthology of short stories by New England mystery authors and hopes to expand into full-length mysteries.

Meanwhile, Mattes has partnered with a new Boston publisher, Justin, Charles & Co., to form the Kate's Mystery Books imprint, which is scheduled to have 12 titles out by the end of this year, including the paperback of First Light, co-written by Philip Craig and William Tapply, and Boyos, a first mystery novel by former Massachusetts state trooper and ex-con Richard Marinick that has recently received media attention.

In some ways publishing "is an extension of bookselling," says Mattes. The big houses in New York don't have a chance to ask readers what kind of mysteries they like, but she can. "I get the feedback from customers all the time."

Sitting behind the register inside the small, homey bookstore, with its well-worn wooden floors and ubiquitous black china cats, Mattes meets everyone in the mystery world, from the published authors to the sales reps to the fans. Dropping by the bookstore in early August, I've just missed a man who pretended to be searching for a character-driven mystery, but really was trying to get up the courage to ask Mattes for a recommendation on an agent.

She doesn't mind. "I just wish he'd gotten to the point a little sooner." Mattes seems to enjoy would-be authors as much as the big names who have become her friends over the years, and she always has time for the mystery fans, a number of whom travel from faraway states like New York and Pennsylvania for her annual holiday party.

Mattes held her first holiday get-together 20 years ago in response to customers who wanted signed author copies to give away as gifts. It began with a handful of writers, including Parker and the Cadavers authors, and has grown each year, so that now, Mattes no longer issues personal invitations to authors, for fear that she'll insult one by inadvertently leaving them out. She instead e-mails and advertises for authors through the Sisters in Crime and Mystery Writers of America newsletters.

This year, Mattes expects at least 50 authors. " Seems like nobody ever moves out of New England, they just move into it. So we just keep getting more good writers," she says. After consulting a few of her longtime friends—the star power like Barnes, Parker and Tapply—she fixes the date of the event, which this year takes place December 3. The event is so popular that a team of regular volunteers comes to help, spending two days moving books and making space for the hordes of attendees who'll pack the long, narrow rooms.

Generally, the lines form around the big names. New and lesser-known authors like myself huddle together catching up on gossip, buying each other's latest books and making plans for where we'll have dinner afterward.

We know each other from our meetings, from our gigs at libraries, bookstores or restaurants, from our shared frustrations of trying to break out of a crowded literary market. And despite our jealousy, we are an egalitarian lot. No one, no matter how many weeks on the best sellers list, brandishes success. I've yet to meet a snob.

Some attribute this camaraderie to the market itself, which supports more successes than any other genre and allows more hope and less despair. Others think it's because we so badly need a support network to face the daily discouragement of selling our stories. But I like Kate Flora's explanation: "Maybe one of the reasons mystery writers are so nice is that we get everything out of our system by killing people on the pages." iB

Batmaking

BY WILLIAM OREM

ILLUSTRATION BY ADRIANO THE PITILESS

So it's the grand opening and I'm there in my cape. The belt fits a little bit tighter this year; I have to admit I actually broke down and drilled an extra hole in the machine shop before coming over, but still I'm looking pretty damn good and I wear the bat with the big yellow circle around it with pride. The way they draw me on the advertisements you'd think it was easy to be dramatically fit, but it isn't so. Staying in shape takes dedication.

Which is what Batman is all about: dedication, training, and doing what is required. That's why I'm proud to wear the costume—to me it's more than just some stunt. It's like putting on a military uniform for someone who's been in the Nam, or something, I guess. You see their faces as they look at you getting out of your car and walking into the store, standing between the Fangoria rack and the ImpQuest rack and the "For Tobacco Use Only" sign, and you know it's no joke. These kids are serious, their lives matter, and they look at you with expectation. They need you to be something more than a loser in a getup, making money on the side. And I never disappoint.

I know a guy who does Green Lantern—every morning for a week when he has a gig he gets up at dawn and runs seven miles and recites the pledge: "In brightest day, by darkest night..." I don't know the whole thing. "Let all who worship evil's might, beware my power, Green Lantern's light." He really does.

And the kids who come to these things; first of all they aren't all kids. And the ones who are kids, you'd think they'd be role-playing Normans or something, but they aren't. People who read graphic novels are some of the most moral, upstanding thinkers in the country. Comics aren't Ka-bram-m-m-m! and Spanggg! anymore. They're about wrongness and rightness; the eternal conflicts; the question, asked by every society ever formed on Earth, of whether justice will prevail.

Is that a question we can afford to ignore? Especially now, with our world vaulting blindly toward its ethical Armageddon? People don't have Jesus anymore, not really. They don't fear the Wrath of Jehovah or the Return of Arthur. But the verdict on us is coming, nonetheless. Can we—as citizens of a superpower, fast becoming a super-duper power—can we afford not to read graphic novels?

No. The answer is no.

We need guidance. They need it. And I know where to get it.

Batman is the greatest of them all. He always was, and until some genius starts penciling an Ayn Rand novel there won't even be any contenders. Why? Because Batman doesn't have any powers. He wasn't hit by a ray (Hulk, Doc Samson, Abomination, the entire Fantastic Four) or born on another planet (Hawkman, Hawkgirl, Martian Manhunter) or given a magic ring (Flash). He can't do magic (Doctor Doom, Doctor Strange, Doctor Spectrum) or throw fire (original Human Torch, Toro, new Human Torch) or blast-rays (Iron Man, Sunfire, Yellow Claw) or change his density (The Vision) or anything like that. He's just a guy. He's just a rich guy. And that's why he's so important. That's why people look up to Batman, and respect him. He shows the capability of the human spirit. He shows the perfectibility of the individual within a single lifetime. It's Marxist in that respect.

I know what you're thinking: Captain America. But you're wrong. He had the Super Soldier Serum.

So I pull up in my car—don't I wish it were! It's just a Hyundai, but I painted it black anyway. I pull up in my car and get out and grab one end of the cape so it catches the breeze made by the door as I throw it open. I make an entrance. The Dark Knight has returned.

Cameras go off and the kids, the little ones, are there wanting an autograph, with some older boys in the back with their hands in their belt loops not sure yet if this is cool. I smile just for a second, but make no mistake—there's action in the air. The table I choose has some Magic: the Gathering figures set up on it, but to hell with 'em. The cape flies, the metal legs make this booming noise and I strike a pose when I land on top. It's great. It's really great.

"Picture this," I say, giving it my best basso profundo. (That means deep voice.) "Gotham is hit by an earthquake. Arkham crumbles, its residents pouring like an evil tide. Killer Croc. Two-face. Bane. There I was..."

One of the preteen crowd makes a farting noise using his armpit under his sleeve. It gets some laughs. I want to tell him with his enormous T-shirt and his enormous jeans and his underwear showing and his hat twisted around sideways that he's wearing a costume—he doesn't realize it but he's wearing a costume, and if he'd listen to me I could tell him something about a costume he could be proud of. But I let it go.

"The government blows the bridges: The city itself must be isolated. The people left behind find villainy around every corner. Waiting for them. Hungry for their allegiance."

But something's definitely wrong. The little faces are all still caught up with me but the preteens are looking somewhere else, around by the back of the store behind the rack of not-quite-dirty magazines. It's not the magazines, either; something else is back there, and they're kind of smiling back and forth, not sure which way to go. It throws me a little, but I compensate. Batman would have.

"Penguin!" I say loudly.

But that's a mistake. It always was kind of a lame idea.

"Kobra, I mean. Catwoman. Gangs forming in the streets, led by evil minds. No direction. No order. Black Mask..."

But it's no good. Someone else is standing behind the magazines, taking half the attention. It's like the time I tried to teach a cartoon drawing class and this 10-year-old who thought he was Todd McFarlane kept talking while I was talking. If you've ever been there, it makes you see red.

"Look, is there someone back there?" I ask. It's meant to be a surprise; I admit my delivery has been thrown a little, but it's not a total surrender. It's meant to shake them up.

But the surprise is mine. He comes out from behind the cleavage-and-lizards posters and flicks a hanging rubber Godzilla with one finger, making it bounce. I see who he is. The crowd makes this sound: Oooooooooooooooh.

Now here's the problem with Superman. He isn't as tough as you think. Sure, he was born on Krypton. So there's the other-planet thing. He can lift battleships and whatnot. The yellow sun of Earth gives him amazing powers, or whatever; and he can fly. But here's his secret. He's a wuss.

It's true. Superman sucks. Want to know why? It's because he can do anything. His strength is exactly his weakness. He can do anything—Siegel and Schuster just kind of threw him together as a character, a guy who can do anything. A train is bearing down on him. Block it with one hand? Sure. Direct hit with a volley of torpedoes. Does he stop reading the Good Housekeeping article he was in the middle of? Not until he comes to the end of the paragraph. A cobalt bomb is stuffed down the back of his shorts. Burn marks on his ass? Not even a singe.

And how much fun is that? I mean, even for a kid? None: the answer is none. It's no fun at all. Who the hell cares if Mr. Mix-pickle-dick has a hard name to pronounce? If Brainiac has a brain? Like that's a conflict? Please. Nobody learns anything from Superman except how to be some kind of Kennedy-compound, everything-you-want-comes-to-you-free whiner. He's the comics equivalent of an Ivy League education. And besides, Doomsday kicked his ass.

"Sorry, Dan," he says, kind of pretending to be looking at the Godzilla for a second. "They didn't think you were going to make it."

Now I'm pissed. It comes over me fast, like a gamma-ray burst. One, he's called me by my outside-of-costume name, and that's so fragging unforgivable it's hard to know what to say. Two, the owners very fragging well knew I was going to be here, I was getting into character, all right? When I get a call it's not like I leap up and say, "Oh yes please give me a gig, I'm desperate and have been feeding my cat Cheerios for a week." No. I hear the phone ring, I hear the voice on the answering machine, and shoom: I'm in character. I go around turning off all the lights in the house. Then I sit in the darkness and play the call again. Because if you call me, you're the red phone. You are Commissioner Gordon, your daughter was Batgirl until she was crippled by Joker and now she's Oracle and you'd better believe I'm going to show. Batman would have.

"That's bull," I say, and it hurts. Batman wouldn't have said "that's bull." It's going to be hard to get the momentum back.

"Yeah, well," he kind of grins, and then he really grins at the preteens like they're all in on a secret. And I know what the secret is. It isn't that they love him and they don't love me. It isn't that. It isn't even the eternal conflict between Superman and Batman. It's worse than that. The secret is that they're too old for this. That's the unforgivable sin. He gives them a spit-curl smile that says, "Look, I'm just a performer in a Superdude suit, these muscles are collagen bags sewn right into the fabric, see here? And we're all a little grown up for this now, aren't we? We're not really into superheroes, we're into reefer and thrash metal and crushproof Camels you can wrap in your sleeve. We come here to check out the poster of Xena in a hot spring and Freak Brothers and the Alex Ross paintings of Wonder Woman because he uses real models and you have to wonder if the steel parts of her breastplate get cold and make her you-know-whats do you-know-what."

And some of them listen. I see three or four faces grow 10 years older when they see that smile, only it's not a good growing. He's killing them all, killing the life that's in them. He's worse than Darkseid.

A couple of the preteens in back start poking around the trading cards now. The one with the giant T-shirt pretends to be sticking something up his nose, which I now see is pierced on both sides so that he looks like he has metal mucus. And the younger ones, their faces are just kind of lost. They're looking for a hero. They don't deserve this.

What would Bruce Wayne have done? I feel like I should be wearing one of those Jesus bracelets, only mine says WWBWHD?

And the answer comes: He would have given up, right then and there. He would have walked out of that crappy little incense-isn't-covering-the-dope five-and-dime and heard the little Balrog-shaped bell jingle and been glad he had a mask on to cover his face as he walked back to his Hyundai where the black paint was peeling away to show the fascia underneath and picked up the ticket under the windshield and driven away playing the radio loud. He would have. He really would have. Everyone has limits.

But I'm not like that. I'm not a loser. I don't quit. Ever.

Then Superman is up and swinging and I can't get out of the way fast enough. I take a hard one in the eye.

The ceiling lamp is old and it almost holds all of my weight. At the last minute it comes about six inches out of its socket in a shower of plaster and my kick falls low, connecting more with Superman's crotch than anything else. But it has the intended effect: the big blue bastard makes a huge W-O-O-O-O sound and doubles over into a pile of back issues. He bounces a little when he lands, and then the wood shelves give way and he's covered in all those dusty pages like he's tumbling in a leaf pile.

For about four seconds I get to stand there with my fists at my sides and stare every one of them in the face. The storeowner looks like he just swallowed all the anti-Breathalyzer mints at one go.

"Who's with me?" I say.

Then Superman is up and swinging and I can't get out of the way fast enough. I take a hard one in the eye. Two punches to his gut later I have him down again but he comes back up and slips on some sports photographs and starts to topple but doesn't. I move in low and start hammering at his torso, and he swings and misses but gets me with the elbow, and then I'm starting to say something but I just keep getting punched. In the stories everyone talks while they fight, but it doesn't really happen that way. Mostly you just swing and swing and get madder and madder. Also you wind up pulling at each other's clothes a lot.

And Superman is pissed. He's bleeding a little out of one nostril and his cheeks are about as red as the Dread Dormammu. He starts to say something himself and I land a good one in his teeth, feeling the front molar bend. His eyes go wide and he picks up a long, flat stick that had been bracing a lifesize picture of Data and he's definitely going to bludgeon me with it.

"Get him!" someone cries, and next thing I can see there are about six kids on him, kicking fast and doing some damage. He can't hit kids—for Christ's sake, he's Superman—and even though they're small they have the effect that Flash goes for when he gets in 50 blows before Gorilla Grood can send back one. I make the leap back up on the table and out the front door and people are cheering now, the parents of the little ones I think it is—they're shouting things at me that I can't quite make out but it sounds good.

I'm up on top of a car when Superman makes it out of the store and comes charging at me. I swear just for a second, just for a second he really looks like he's about to start flying, but whether he does or not he comes at me like a baby-blue scud missile and after a few punches I have to jump back, stumbling over someone else's roof. Now we're fighting in moving traffic and people are leaning out their windows and calling us "madfrickinggoddamiz" and I'm jumping one, two, three car roofs at a time, and then I turn around in a surprise move and smash the candy-ass right in the chin, right in that squarer-than-justice jaw with a fist that has Kryptonite written all over it. Payback is sweet.

Then it happens. Superman spits and wipes his mouth as if to rub off the shame and he's looking up at me and he's steamed, he's very much steamed, and the car he's standing on roars forward just for a second and this time he really does go flying. He's in the air and then he's on the pavement, the driver shouts something and is gone, and the last son of Krypton is lying there and not getting up, looking like he twisted something in the fall, and there's traffic coming.

It doesn't take a second to decide. I jump down and lean into the window of the car I had been standing on.

"Citizen," I say. "Call an ambulance. I'll handle this."

The guy just kind of stares at me and then his bald head nods a little bit, and I smile at him and race away. Two bounds and I'm crouched over Superman where he lies. There is traffic coming from both directions and I hold my hand up to it.

"Halt!" I shout.

Of course it doesn't work. One guy skids crazily to the side and hits another, nobody is hurt but there's glass, and the cars coming from the other direction can't see anything yet. They're still moving at full speed. And the one in front is huge, it's a truck carrying those purified water bottles you can buy.

"Use your X-Ray vision," I say. "Melt the tires."

"You're a goddamned lunatic," Superman says, but he's delirious. There's nothing else to do, I stand up and place myself in front of the oncoming truck, arms out as if I were going to catch it in my hands. The truck slows and then screeeeees and then skids left, and it stops a foot or two in front of me, but I haven't moved.

"My j—, my j—," I say. I want to say "my job here is done," but my heart is beating so hard all I'm doing is opening and closing my mouth. I can feel the bruises starting to come up underneath my cowl. The guy in the driver's cab leans forward to stare at me until his forehead is touching the windshield.

"OK. Great," I say.

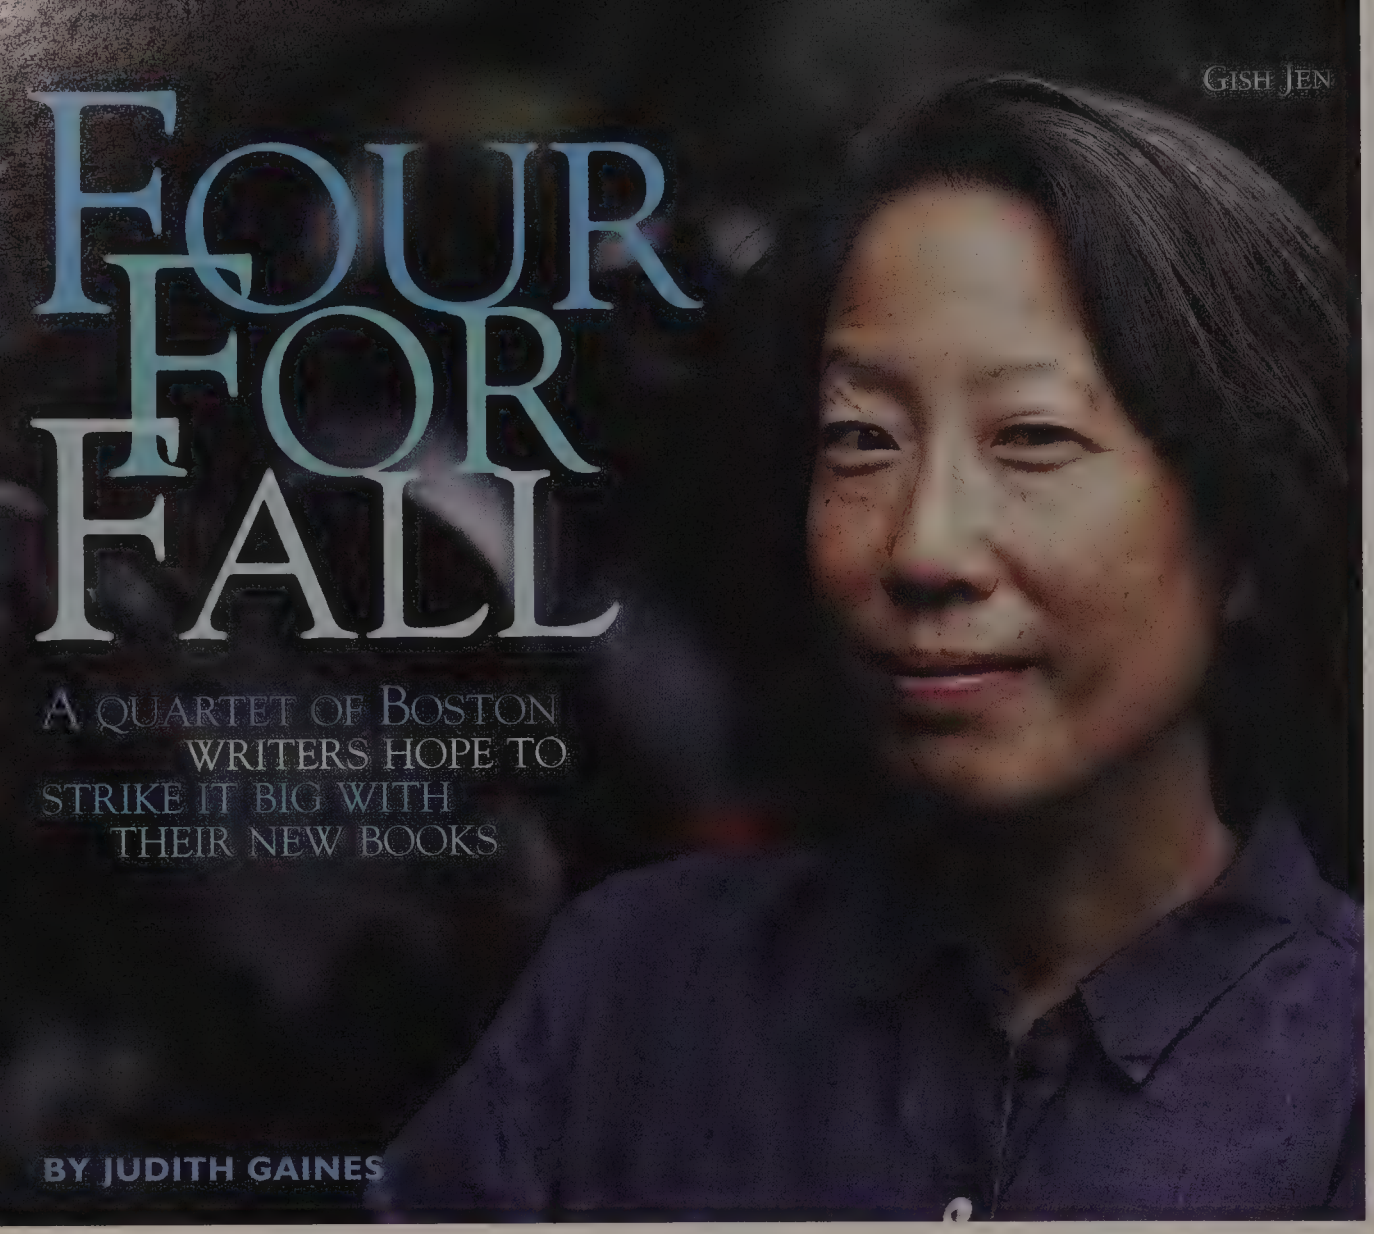
I turn around and Superman is standing again. He wasn't hurt as badly as it looked. The yellow sun gives him strength.

I raise my fists. They shake a little bit. But he doesn't reciprocate.

"You just saved my life, Dan," he says instead. I say nothing and he wipes gingerly at his nose and spits and looks at me for a minute and something in his expression changes. "You just saved my life, Batman," he says. He seems to think about it for a second. "Thank you."

There's a crowd around us and they start clapping. The kids love it. I mean, they love it. They really do. An ambulance has arrived from somewhere and the orderlies are looking at us and looking at each other and I wave to them that it's all right. We turn and wave to them. I wave and he waves too, he's kind of laughing and shaking his head and waving, and he has that smile you've seen a million times since you were a kid until you think maybe there really is such a place as Kansas where the wheat grows tall and healthy and the Kents raised their son to use his extraordinary power only for good. I can see why he got the job. I start to go a little misty.

Then I spot it. The preteen with the pierced boogers has a carton of cigarettes stuck under that enormous T-shirt and is making off while everyone is distracted by us. They look both ways and then two of his friends lift the cashier money. Something knots up inside me. Something righteous.



I look over at him and he's seen it too.

"Let's kick some Legion of Doom ass," he says.

"Holy team-up," I answer, and we're on them like judgment day. iB

FOUR FOR FALL

A QUARTET OF BOSTON WRITERS HOPE TO STRIKE IT BIG WITH THEIR NEW BOOKS

BY JUDITH GAINES

Fall is the busy season in book publishing, and every year, a few of the scores of new releases rise to the top of reviewers' lists and generate buzz from industry insiders. This year, a bevy of Boston-based authors are releasing highly anticipated books. Among the potential blockbusters are Gish Jen's The Love Wife, Margot Livesey's Banishing Verona (due in November), Ha Jin's War Trash and Maria Tatar's The Annotated Brothers Grimm. The books differ dramatically in style, tone, format and intent. But, coincidentally, they deal with related themes: the importance of home and family, the responsibilities these entail, and the dangers that can come from romantic and familial attachments. They're all terrific reads, full of intriguing twists and turns. As it happens, all the authors are either first- or second-generation immigrants for whom "home" is a complicated concept, and their books all grew out of their personal experiences. The bad news is, you can't go home again. The good news is, you may not want to. Or maybe home can be redefined.

Gish Jen's novel The Love Wife centers on the Wong family: Mama Wong, the domineering Chinese matriarch, as strong in death as in life; son Carnegie, 39, a smart, funny, high-tech type who manages documents for a living in a city that could be Boston; his big, WASP-ish 45-year-old wife, a former farm girl whom he calls Blondie; their adopted daughters Lizzie, 14, an in-your-face sort of teenager, and shy Wendy, 9; their biological baby, 13-month-old Bailey; and the mysterious Lanlan, 46, a relative from China.

In her will, Mama Wong decrees that Lanlan should come to live with her son's family as a nanny, presumably to help the girls understand their Chinese ancestry. But her arrival causes the whole family to question their allegiance not just to American ways but to each other. Blondie especially is jealous of her daughters' attraction to Lanlan, and of her husband's warm feelings for the nanny. Whether the marriage and the family bond can survive Lanlan's intrusion into their lives is the question on which the novel turns, with several surprising twists at the end.

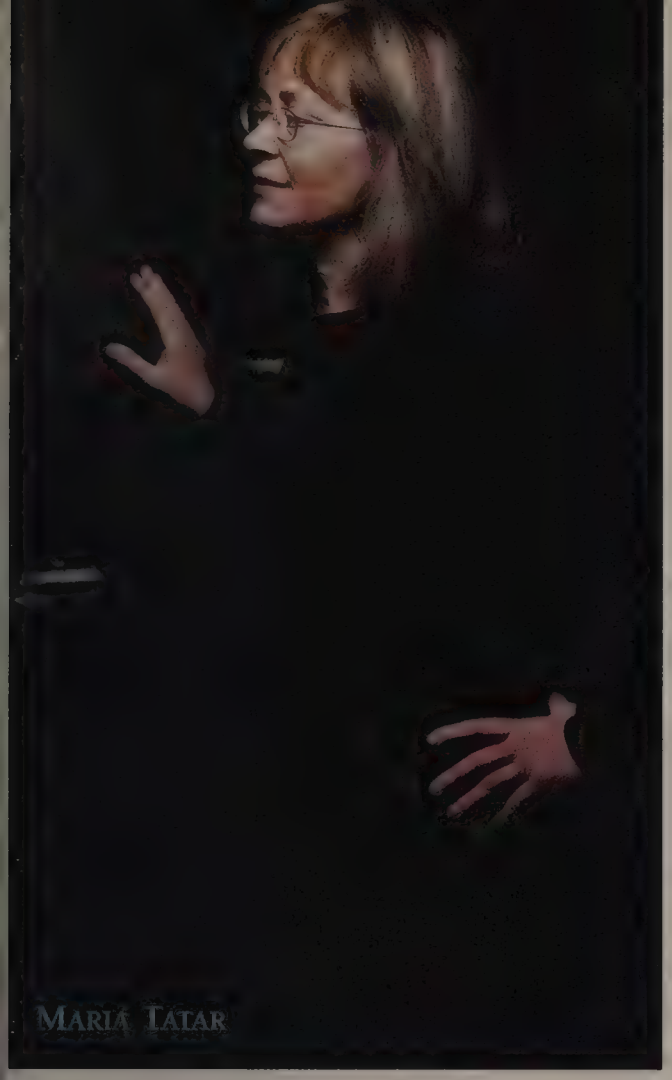
It's a lively, insightful book full of entertaining cultural clashes and enhanced by an imaginative format in which the characters take turns narrating the story, giving the reader their own take on what has happened. Each narrates as if speaking to a documentary filmmaker, or perhaps, Jen quips, a therapist, a device that helps to make their personalities more clear, if not more credible.

Jen, a second-generation Chinese-American, lives in Cambridge with two biracial children and a husband who, like Carnegie, has a high-tech job. She says she began the novel "after we got an au pair, who was German and fair. I had a fair daughter. People would ask, was I the real mother of this child, or was I the au pair? It was food for thought. I starting thinking, what is a family? Can we construct these things, or is it all a matter of blood?"

Jen lets the reader draw his or her own conclusions. But the stunning, bittersweet ending makes clear that finding the answer can be painful, and even the most carefully improvised families may find that the ties that bind can be alarmingly fragile.

Banishing Verona, Margot Livesey's suspenseful new romantic novel, also explores the obligations of family and the difficulties of being different. But what sets apart Livesey's central character, Zeke, is that the handsome, 29-year-old housepainter living in London has Asperger's syndrome, something like a mild and quirky form of autism. Zeke is kind and well meaning but also compulsive and socially awkward. He has trouble deciphering other people's expressions and coping with anything new.

But when he meets Verona, 37 and very pregnant, his attraction to her shakes up his life. A beguiling romance is kindled in the first chapter, only to be thwarted for most of the rest of the book by the demands of Verona's corrupt but charming brother, Henry, who has no qualms about asking her to fly to Boston and then to New York on his behalf, and by Zeke's parents, who want him tending their produce shop instead of chasing after Verona. Plus, the couple have their own problems: his illness, which causes him to be combative and insular, and her infidelity, which eventually leads to a marital breakup.



Interestingly, it's just when Zeke makes the most Herculean efforts for Verona that she is most inconsiderate of him and the most doggedly devoted to Henry, despite how badly he behaves. "That's my view of how the world works," says Livesey over tea at her North Cambridge home. "It's not unusual to give a million second chances to someone in your family, the way Verona does for Henry. Love becomes a kind of vanity. You think you have enormous influence over someone you love, but they treat you just like everyone else—or worse. And great charm often conceals deceit."

Born in Scotland, Livesey came to Boston in 1983 to teach at Tufts and is currently a writer in residence at Emerson. An only child of parents who were also only children, her mother died when she was two years old, so she says she "adopted" a neighboring family with four children. The experience made her aware of the difficulties of empathy—a theme of her book—and the different ways that families can be cobbled together.

Livesey says she started thinking about Asperger's syndrome when a friend's young son was diagnosed with the condition about 10 years ago, and she watched how it complicated his life as he grew up. But her book doesn't try to be clinical or to treat Zeke as disabled. "Characters like him hold up a mirror to the rest of us," she says, explaining her view of Zeke. "They show us something we recognize, but in unfamiliar ways."

War Trash by Ha Jin is a completely different sort of novel. Written as if it were a memoir, it's the intimate and immediately gripping story of Yu Yuan, a young Chinese officer sent to fight for the Communists in Korea in 1951. After just a few months in action deep in South Korean territory, he's injured, captured and sent to a POW camp.

Although Americans are nominally in charge, they only guard the prison gates and rarely set foot in the actual compound. Everything there is left in the hands of the prisoners, and the bulk of War Trash explores what that life is like for them—a hell, it often seems, of their own making. Because Yu is more educated than most and speaks good English, he becomes an unofficial interpreter and observes the behavior of both the leaders and the led in several different prison camps—some controlled by Communists and others by pro-Nationalist forces who had been loyal to Chiang Kai-shek.

Neither a dedicated Communist nor a die-hard Nationalist, Yu just wants to get home to see his aging mother and his fiancée, Julan, in China. He suffers innumerable miseries for their sakes—only to find, when he finally is released, that his mother has died and Julan won't respond to his letters, presumably because he was a prisoner of war. In the Communists' view, Yu learns, it would have been better if he had died in battle; those who survive are considered nothing more than "war trash."

Ha Jin, currently a professor of creative writing at Boston University, notes that although his book's main characters are fictional, most of the events and details in it are based in fact, including many graphic descriptions of army and prison life. He should know. Born in Manchuria, in central China, Jin served six years in the Chinese army beginning in 1969, when he was 14. He was afraid of death, he says, but more afraid of being captured "because I saw how the POWs were abused." His father also was a veteran of the Korean War, so Jin often heard him and his friends discussing their experiences.

Over the years, Jin has made a hobby of collecting books, diaries, prison records and other documents about the Korean War, which he says has been largely forgotten, not only by Americans but even by the Chinese. "I wanted to tell a good story," he says, discussing why he picked that topic for his book. "But I also hope it fills a gap."

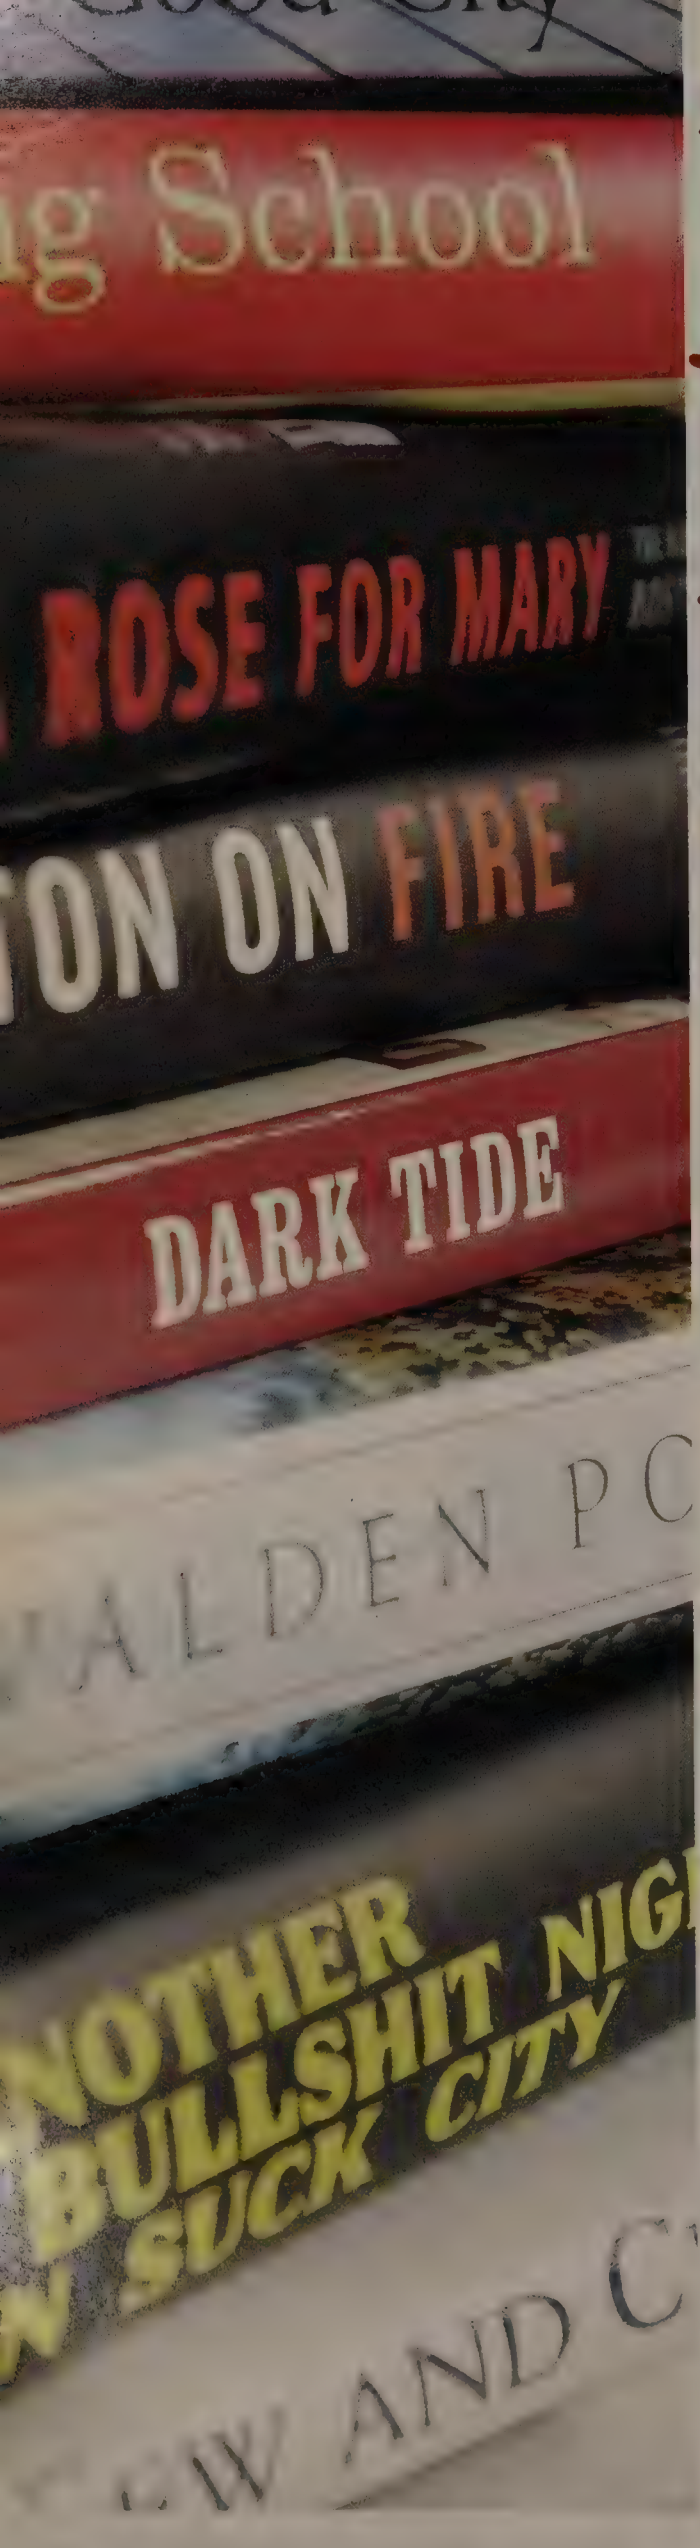
The Annotated Brothers Grimm, by Maria Tatar, is a collection of 46 of the Grimms' fairy tales, selected and translated by Tatar, with explanatory footnotes and accompanying essays discussing the origins and significance of the stories, as well as a short biography of the Grimm brothers. Numerous illustrations from earlier editions of the tales and a beautiful cover make the book sumptuous to behold, a great coffee table tome.

Readers will be familiar with the broad outlines of many of the tales presented here. But they may be surprised to see how deeply grim the stories were in the brothers' original versions. Whereas Ha Jin's book recounts the horrors of a foreign and forgotten war, Tatar's collection reveals that other terrors lurk at home, where dangers lie around every corner. Stepmothers get a particularly bad rap.



Tatar, a second-generation Hungarian, is dean for the humanities at Harvard and an authority on Germanic literature and culture. She describes the Grimms as serious scholars dedicated to preserving the German folk heritage as authentically as they could, although in later editions of their classic Children's Stories and Household Tales they removed the most racy and sexual details to make the stories more appropriate for children. Still, even the edited versions seem stunningly violent and brutal. Evildoers are likely to be boiled in a vat full of snakes and toads or to have their eyes pecked out, and even innocent children get cooked and eaten or swallowed alive. Cannibalism is rife.

This sadism is particularly striking because, according to Tatar, the Grimms' classic is the third best-selling book of all time, topped only by the Bible and Shakespeare's works. The stories also are constantly being revised and recycled. "They greet us at the movies as Pretty Woman or Working Girl," Tatar explains, "at the opera as Hansel and Gretel or La Cenerentola, in advertisements for everything from Chanel to chocolate."

Asked how something so full of atrocities could be so popular and deeply ingrained in our culture, Tatar says the tales have therapeutic value. Children worry about being abandoned, lost, engulfed or swallowed up, and death in any form is hard for them to discuss, she explains. By encountering some of these primal anxieties in the safe "once upon a time" fantasy of a fairy tale, they can begin to process and deal with their fears.

And in most of the stories, the good characters live happily ever after. "The tales show that children can survive, if they use their wits," Tatar said. "Even in the darkest situations, there is hope." iB

BOSTON BOUND

RECENT RELEASES CAPTURE REAL LIFE IN THE HUB

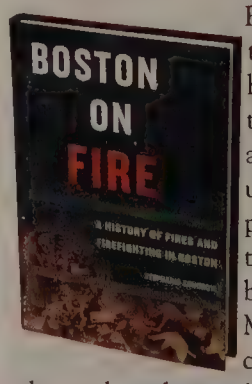
BY ERIN HAGEDORN

t's only fair that a city that's home to so many accomplished authors would get its due in those writers' works. This year, scores of authors have combined their literary prowess with their passion for Boston. Some have written historical books, like W. Barksdale Maynard's look at Walden Pond and Casey Sherman's account of his search for the real Boston Strangler. Others offer personal accounts of life in the city—the good and the bad—in a book of essays and a memoir. All the books (too many to be included here) shed light on various aspects of Boston's history and culture, offering new ways to look at the city we live in. As Deborah Meier writes in the book she's co-written about running a local school, "Book lovers have learned one special skill: to enjoy the adventures of other people, other times, and even other species, to thus add many lifetimes to their own."

Dark Tide: The Great Boston Molasses Flood of 1919

BY STEPHEN PULEO, BEACON PRESS, 2003, $23

Sure, it might sound kind of funny at first. But when you think about it, drowning in a wave of molasses has got to be a horrifying way to die. If you grew up around here, chances are you've heard about the day that a tank holding 2.3 million gallons of molasses ruptured, sending a 25-foot-high wave of the liquid through the North End. A half mile of Commercial Street was destroyed in minutes; 150 people were injured and 21 people died that day. The clean-up alone took months.



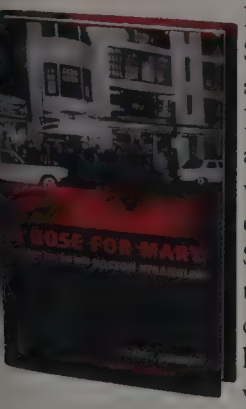
Historian Stephen Puleo describes the events surrounding the Great Molasses Flood, beginning with the tank's rushed construction in 1915 and concluding with the lawsuits and drawn-out courtroom dramas that lasted years after the disaster. Puleo makes the story personal, describing the people who worked on the tank and then telling the stories of those who were there when it fell. It's not until page 96 that the tank breaks; by then, the reader has come to know many of the people involved quite well.

The giant steel tank, which stored molasses for distillation into industrial alcohol, began "crying long thick tears of brown molasses" shortly after construction was completed. The trial that followed the 1919 disaster was politically charged: The company that built the tank blamed it on antiwar, anticapitalist Italian anarchists who operated in the North End. Others argued that the construction itself was faulty, done without proper precautions in a congested neighborhood whose poor, immigrant residents had little political voice.

But Dark Tide isn't all about finger-pointing and tragedy. Puleo gives credit to the heroes too, and discusses the significant role molasses played in New England's history. It's all told in colorful, descriptive, dramatic prose that reads at times like a novel, evincing Puleo's passion for this most unusual historical event.

Boston on Fire: A History of Fires and Firefighting in Boston

BY STEPHANIE SCHOROW, COMMONWEALTH EDITIONS, 2003, $24.95



Reading about disasters can be as disturbingly intriguing as watching one happen. Often even more so, since the immediate effects of fires, bombs and floods are felt in a matter of minutes, while the full details can be explored in much greater depth after the fact. Boston on Fire, the debut book by Boston Herald reporter and Medford resident Stephanie Schorow, covers a lot of scorched ground in chronicling the area's history of fires and firefighting, from how fires have changed city regulations and even Boston's geography, to details about the time period of each conflagration—and the repercussions and possible causes of each. While covering the evolution of firefighting itself, Schorow describes how Boston has been a site of firefighting firsts. The city had the nation's first paid fire department, and it founded an unprecedentedly elaborate—and effective—citywide alarm system.

To tell the stories of the city's biggest blazes, Schorow uses firsthand accounts from people involved, describing conflagrations like the Great Fire of 1872 (which destroyed 60 acres of downtown Boston) and the Cocoanut Grove nightclub disaster in 1942 (in which nearly 500 people were killed or injured in under 15 minutes). She also sheds light on lesser-known infernos such as the incredible 200-plus fires set by "Mr. Flare" and his pyromaniac comrades in the early '80s—some were later arrested. Reading Schorow's book is also a great way to learn some history of the city while being intrigued by the vivid details of the fires.

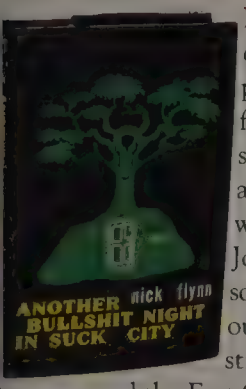
A Rose for Mary: The Hunt for the Real Boston Strangler

BY CASEY SHERMAN, NORTHEASTERN UNIVERSITY PRESS, 2003, $24.95



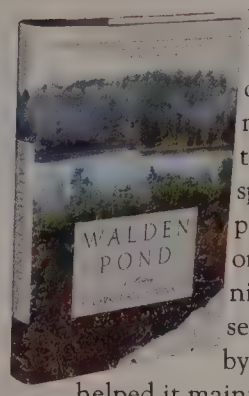
For years, the story of the Boston Strangler has fascinated, captivated and horrified Bostonians and non-Bostonians alike. Just over a year after the body of the strangler's final victim, Mary Sullivan, was discovered, a convict named Albert DeSalvo made a startling confession to the crimes. The city breathed a sigh of relief; the killer was already behind bars for a sexual assault conviction, never to strike again.

And yet, questions still linger. Was DeSalvo's confession genuine? Or was he simply looking for the spotlight? In A Rose for Mary, WBZ-TV producer Casey Sherman goes to great lengths to question DeSalvo's guilt. Bringing more than journalistic curiosity to this endeavor, Sherman has a personal motive as well: Sullivan was his mother's sister.

The author makes a compelling argument for reopening the case of the Sullivan murder, despite opposition from the Massachusetts attorney general's office, and the emotional turmoil that his efforts stirred in his family. He points out, for example, that DeSalvo's description of Sullivan's murder differed substantially from what investigators knew. He also shows that there were other likely suspects who were dismissed or went uninvestigated by police, in the Sullivan murder as well as many of the strangler's other supposed attacks. Though the Boston Strangler murders stopped 10 months before DeSalvo went to prison, he was never charged with any of the crimes—nor was anyone else.

Another Bullshit Night in Suck City

BY NICK FLYNN, W.W. NORTON & CO., 2004, $23.95



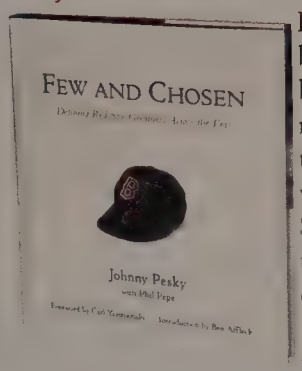
Nick Flynn's memoir isn't as down on Boston as its title suggests. The phrase itself originated with Flynn's father, Jonathan, who used it to describe the homeless life in Boston and who shares the focus of the book with the author. Beginning with Jonathan's desertion of his wife and son, Flynn chronicles his father's various attempts to become a writer, his stints in jail, and time spent drifting around the East Coast camped out on park benches, in ATM booths and on the streets. Alongside this biographical account, the author interweaves the story of his own shaky adolescence and adulthood, discussing his work with the mob and drug and alcohol problems.

Interesting as the above subject matter may seem, the book would probably never have been written had the long-lost father and son not ended up in the same place later in life. When Nick was in his late 20s and trying to get his own life together, he took a job at the South End's Pine Street Inn. There he met his father, a total stranger who began spending nights in the shelter.

With all the evident melodrama, the Flynns' story could easily have been overwhelmed by melancholy. But instead of lapsing into self-pity or maudlin sincerity, Nick's narrative voice is modest, understated and often funny. He touches gracefully upon devastating subjects and lets the reader feel their effects, rather than relying on shock value or overwrought prose. Flynn's book could easily have become a sort of Chicken Soup-Kitchen for the Soul, but instead, he's created a gutsy and very human work that's as gritty as the streets of Suck City itself.

Walden Pond: A History

BY W. BARKSDALE MAYNARD, OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS, 2004, $35.



Maynard's book commemorates the 150th anniversary of the publication of Henry Thoreau's Walden, which made the Concord pond famous as a transcendental place of creative and spiritual importance. While Maynard points out that the pond is distinctly ordinary in appearance, its original significance and its place at the center of several environmental battles (fought by such celebs as Don Henley) have helped it maintain its prominence as one of America's most beloved literary landmarks.

With roughly 700,000 visitors per year, Walden these days is far from the picture of solitude and tranquility that Thoreau painted. Maynard sheds light on the surprisingly complex history of the site, from the early 19th century to the present day. The book's first half is dedicated to Thoreau, Ralph Waldo Emerson and the Concord literary crowd and its influence on the area. The scholarly research is there (there are 50 pages of endnotes and bibliography), but Maynard draws the reader in with his charmingly readable prose, relating the pond's appeal to the throngs—from nature-lovers and intellectuals, to tourists and nighttime mischief makers—who still flock to it.

Few and Chosen: Defining Red Sox Greatness Across the Eras

BY JOHNNY PESKY WITH PHIL PEPE, TRIUMPH BOOKS, 2004, $27.95

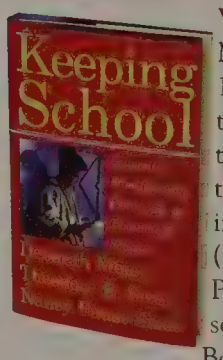
How would you like to pick the best Red Sox players ever, assembling a dream team from the ranks of every player in the team's history? Sounds like a fun way to pass an evening at the bar. Sox legend Johnny Pesky has taken that task seriously, however. Assisted by sportswriter Phil Pepe, who has 39 books under his belt, Pesky presents his Sox dream team picks in this 170-page book.

Pesky began his major league career in 1942 as a Sox shortstop, and over the years logged bench time with notables like Ted Williams and Dom DiMaggio. Since then, he's been a coach, manager and broadcaster for the team. At 84, he's become something of a Red Sox lifer, still working with the team as an instructor. He ranks the all-time top five Sox players for each position, as well as the team's top five managers. Almost like a century-long scouting report, the book breaks down all of Pesky's picks—assets and shortcomings—and includes a detailed analysis of each player's career, along with Pesky's personal reminiscences. The entries read like short stories about players rather than a dry list of batting averages and stats.

As an added bonus, Sox left-field legend Carl Yastrzemski writes the foreword and Boston homeboy Ben Affleck chimes in with an introduction. Sports fiends will learn lots about players of the past, and die-hard fans will have fun arguing over Pesky's choices—it's telling that there are a handful of 2004 Sox on the list.

The Good City: Writers Explore 21st-Century Boston

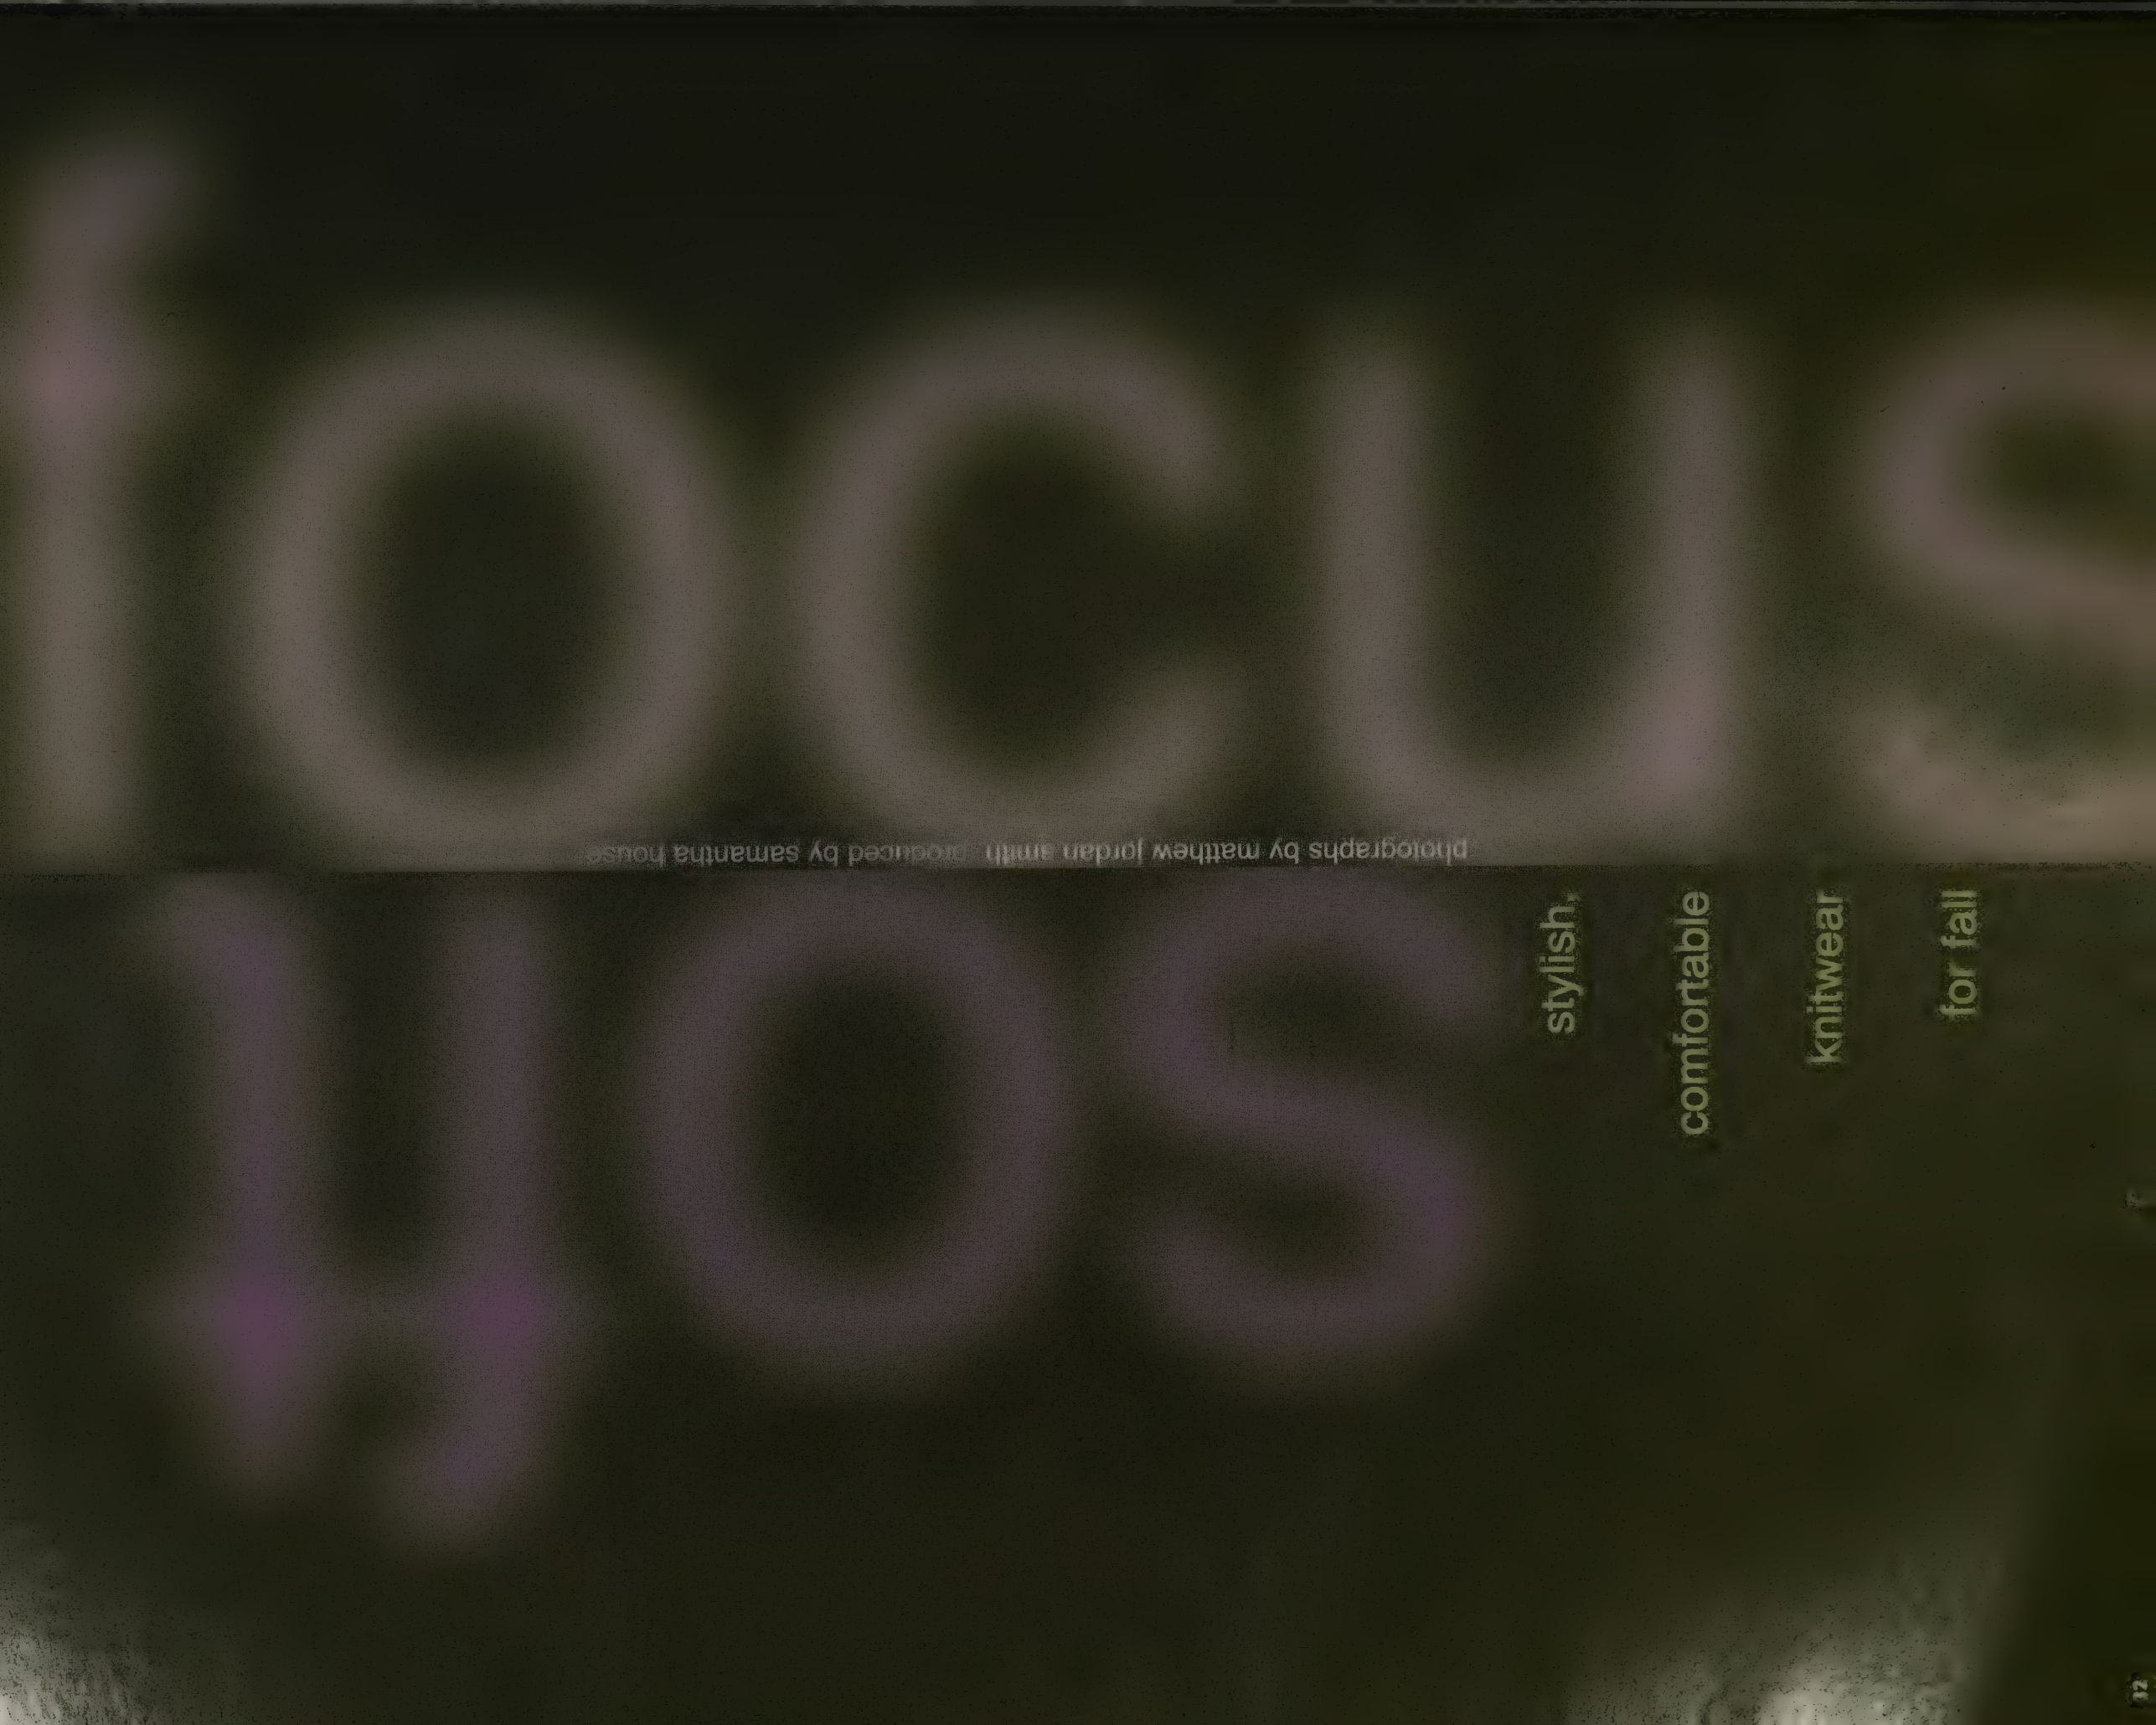
EDITED BY EMILY HIESTAND AND ANDE ZELLMAN, BEACON PRESS, 2004, $14



For this new anthology, 15 Boston writers contribute brief essays to paint a contemporary picture of the city. The stories touch on a hodgepodge of topics, ranging from the city's kid-friendly parks to gentrification; from architecture to desegregation to the Red Sox. Each captures the writer's particular relationship to Boston. Some write about defining moments in the city's history, others relate first-person accounts of their impressions of Boston. Globe columnist Derrick Z. Jackson and All Souls: A Family Story from Southie author Michael Patrick MacDonald write about race and class issues; Atlantic Monthly senior editor Jack Beatty describes Boston's political state of affairs in the late 1940s. Personal essays about what it's like to live in the city and what makes it unique come from novelist Anita Diamant and author Lynda Morgenroth. Orchid Thief author Susan Orlean writes about how falling in love brought her back to Boston, and how she rediscovered the city.

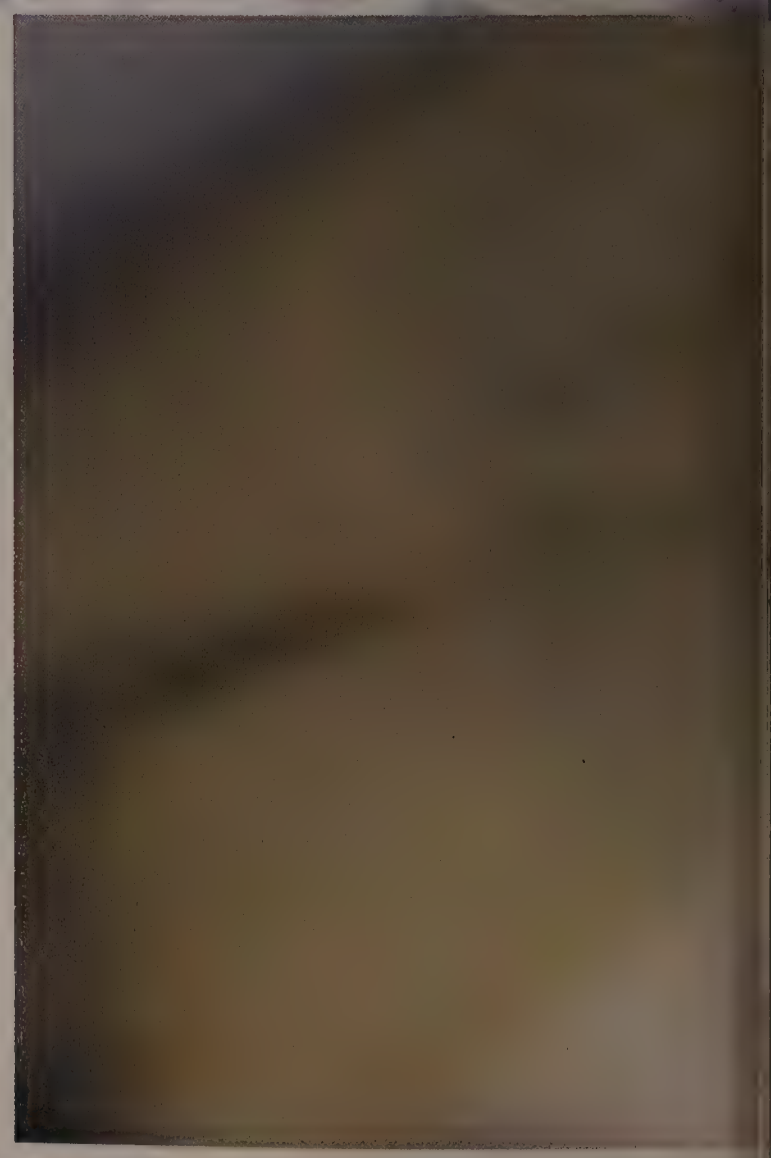
In aiming to answer the question, What makes Boston a good city? the writers don't collectively sing the Hub's praises but rather point out its offerings—cultural, physical, economic and scholarly—while sometimes tempering their appreciation with acknowledgements of the city's peculiarities. Perhaps the title of John Hanson Mitchell's contribution, in which he describes the physical evolution of parts of the city, sums it up best: "An Eden of Sorts."

Keeping School: Letters to Families from Principals of Two Small Schools



BY DEBORAH MEIER, THEODORE R. SIZER AND NANCY FAUST SIZER, BEACON PRESS, 2004, $23

When Deborah Meier founded the Mission Hill School in Roxbury in 1997, she began writing a weekly letter to the school's teachers, students and their families. Theodore Sizer is a nationally known education reformer who in 1998 and '99 served as co-principal (with his wife, Nancy) of the Francis W. Parker Charter Essential School, a small secondary school in Devens, west of Boston. Every week, the Sizers wrote a letter to keep Parker faculty, students and parents "on the same page" about school developments and goings-on.



Keeping School collects dozens of Meier's and the Sizers' letters, grouped into four major topics in alternative schooling: Learning, Authority, Standards and Community. Each section starts with a short introduction by one of the three writers and covers topics ranging from grading and homework to parent/teacher accountability and drugs. So what could these letters contain that's interesting to those outside their schools' communities? Well, many of their "less is more" ideas apply to innumerable situations that have nothing to do with school—focusing as they do on issues of responsibility, relationship-building and individuality. Also enlightening are the letters that try to explain the unorthodox methods of these "essential schools"—public schools that use nontraditional approaches such as open classrooms, pacing learning to each student's knowledge level, and so on.

Even for those who aren't educators or parents, Keeping School makes for fascinating reading about progressive schools and their emphasis on community, nonstandardized tests, small class sizes and personalized teaching. The letters aren't preachy, but they provide a wealth of lessons that can be applied outside of classrooms, to students of all ages. iB

MAKE IT BETTER

Living Light as a Feather*, by Ruth Fishel of Cape Cod, is subtitled "How to Find Joy in Every Day and a Purpose in Every Problem."

Four years after she wrote a book promoting joy, teacher and writer Ruth Fishel was struck with the ultimate blow: the suicide of her beloved son. The grief this brought could have destroyed any mother, but in fact it strengthened Fishel's determination to develop attitudes, practices, and ways of feeling that would not only lighten her burden, but make it floatingly easy to bear. Her book proposes "heart-lightening steps" that derive from Buddhism, twelve-step programs and other sources of wisdom: living in the moment, cultivating acceptance, being spiritual and intentional. Rituals are another helpful route: On her son's birthday, the family eats fried clams, his favorite food. Fishel lets us know—through stories of people's various life crises, including her own alcoholism, now in recovery—the ways in which darkening, negative forces can beckon. It's even more crucial, then, to "seek alternate routes"—to focus on helping other people exactly when you feel too needy or depleted; to be aware of the mote in your own eye when criticizing others; to notice the stones of negativity one is hugging. On letting go, the Talmud says: "If not now, when?"

WOODN'T IT BE LOVELY

Pompanoosuc Mills, at One Kendall Square, Building 300, Cambridge, sells clean-lined, hardwood furniture. Pieces are special-ordered with à la carte features. Ask about special sales. Call 617-494-0406.

As if surrounded by its own invisible Vermont, the furniture at Pompanoosuc Mills has a prevailing look of honest purity. Hailing from that state, the furniture comes in six different North American hardwoods: birch, cherry, walnut, oak, maple and bird's eye maple. The style is "transitional"—somewhere between traditional and contemporary. Pompanoosuc's massive line of possibilities becomes even more expansive through its made-to-order build process. Customers special-order everything: the size of the piece, the wood, edge treatments, and any other desired stylistic tweakings. Much in evidence is the spindle-backed or slat-sided look that lets the air of freedom waft through the wood. And because this furniture mostly brandishes its clean, good-wooden beauty through foursquare simplicity, the elements of sway and bend—gracefully bowed or subtly skewed legs, laid-back sofa sides, bureau fronts that swim slightly toward you, or the roundness of a dining room table's edge—really have an effect. Some more ornate touches, such as the almost star-shaped design located in the middle of the airy spacing of a chair back, are equally effective. The range of pieces includes beds with storage drawers incorporated underneath, beautiful blanket boxes and tall, skinny "lingerie chests" demanding face-front placement, say in an entrance hall.

PLANT YOURSELF IN THE EARTH OF HEALTH

The Boston School of Herbal Studies offers an apprenticeship program and other courses in Western, ayurvedic and Chinese herbalism. Call 781-646-6319 or go to www.bostonherbalstudies.com

These plants, herbs and apparent weeds lolloping over our yards and hiding their light under shaggy leaves, contain a fascinating world of medicinal usefulness in their roots, flowers, bark and seeds. People turn to herbal medicine when other treatments have failed, are too expensive or have nasty side effects. But beyond that, herbalism makes a claim to the spiritual and shamanistic. "Plants have something to teach us," says Madelon Hope, of the Boston School of Herbal Studies. And living unassumingly alongside us, they're fortifying themselves against the same conditions we are. Classes taught by Tommy Priester include herbal first aid as well as one in "shamanic plant journeying" that involves calling the spirits and drumming. Other classes involve plant walks and identification, lectures, demonstrations and herbal "cooking" (which continues at home in lengthy soakings and infusings). The magical language of herbalism's teeming universe—tinctures, decoctions, poultices, salves—sounds enticingly Shakespearean. The varied talents of a given plant are impressive: Medicinal plants have up to 120 different chemical constituents. This complexity explains why one plant—whether it's trillium, dandelion, plantain (an "herbal bandaid that can draw out infection) or one of many others—can address body systems including the digestive, the immune and even the emotions. It's rich lore for study and experimentation.

REVIEW

HOOKED ON ONYX

Hotel's Ruby Room restaurant serves up some gems.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

The Kimpton organization has added another gem to its coast to coast diadem of boutique hotels. The Onyx Hotel, on Portland Street, a stone's throw from the old Boston Garden, is the second Kimpton hotel in Greater Boston, joining the Marlowe, which opened two years ago in Cambridge. Unlike the Marlowe's Bambara, a larger and more ambitious restaurant, the Onyx's Ruby Room combines bar, eatery and lounge in a compact yet comfortable space bathed in the glow of red light emanating from its flamboyant chandelier. While a recent visit to Boston by Britney Spears provided the Onyx Hotel with some publicity, it would be a mistake to dismiss this engaging new establishment as a teeny bopper venue or to look for a pop-tart (to use the tabloids' sobriquet for Spears) on its menu.

After launching the Ruby Room with 13 food offerings set forth under the undifferentiated heading "eats," the Onyx reconfigured its menu into the three categories: eight "fun sharables," two sandwiches, and five "tapa-size tasting plates," along with a handful of desserts. Ruby Room chef Jonnatan Leiva (who hails from San Francisco, home to 12 Kimpton hotels including one that boasts Wolfgang Puck's Postrio) evidences a flair for tastes and textures.

Among the menu's "sharables"—a superfluous term to my mind since all courses are sharable at my table—the orecchiette pasta with sautéed broccoli rabe, peas and sweet peppers ($9.50) vied with the steamed Prince Edward Island mussels ($9.50) for bragging rights. The delicate "little ears" of pasta, coated with the garlicky olive oil in which the broccoli was sautéed, and delicious in themselves, were rendered outstanding by the complementary sweet summer treats of fresh al dente green peas and roasted red peppers with first-rate flavor and velvety texture. The generous bowl of mussels, steamed in white wine, olive oil, shallots and thyme—the most prominent of its herbs—boasted a hearty, roasted flavor that the chef later explained came from cooking the bivalves over a high heat. The broth that remained after the mussels had been dispatched moved me to request a spoon, since bread was not served. The third sharable, roasted chicken wings with honey lemon barbeque sauce ($8.50), and the one sandwich sampled, a "big fat cheeseburger with skinny fries" ($10) brought us back to the reality of more ordinary bar food. The wings were moist but lacked crisp skin, and the barbeque sauce was almost cloying in its sweetness—too much honey and not enough lemon. The provision of a finger bowl, however, added a note of sophistication not often encountered in a bar. The burger, which the waitress had described as the "best burger ever," turned out to be dry and overcooked, despite my ordering it medium-rare. The "skinny fries" that accompanied it, on the other hand, rivaled fries served in the best classic French and Belgian bistros.

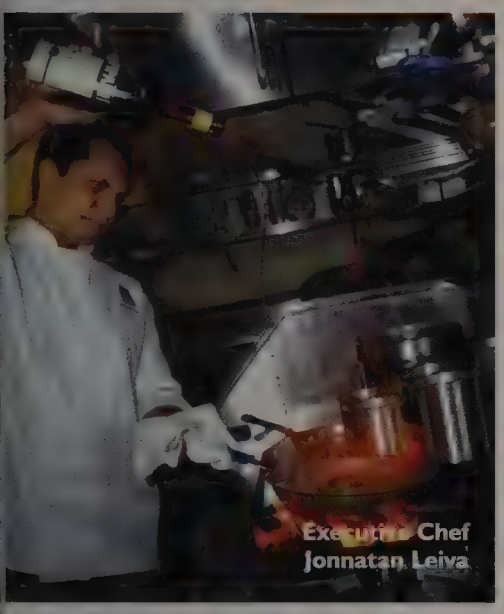
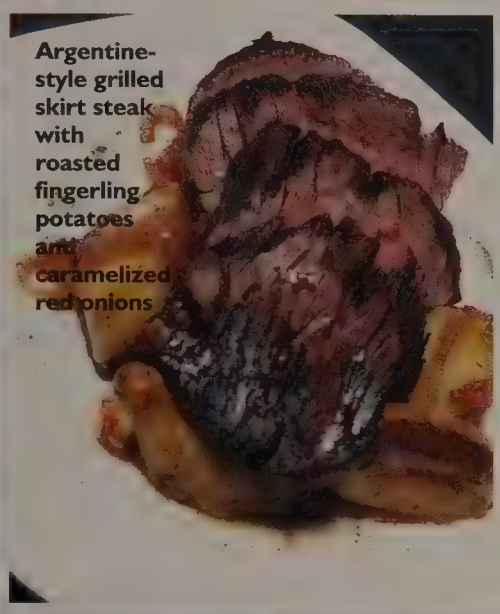
Moving to the tapa-size plates, we en countered one superb dish after anothe The pan-seared local hake, with celery roo and green squash succotash ($11.50), con tained several bites—clearly not tapa-size— of firm-textured fish bathed in a lively, pleas antly salty sage sauce. Argentine-style grille skirt steak ($13) arrived rare as ordered, wit hearty beef flavor, and remarkably tender fo this cut of steak, probably the result of a lon bath in a marinade. Roasted fingerling pota toes and caramelized red onions made this substantial and filling dish, again, a far cr from a classic two-bite tapa. Braised shor ribs ($13.50), rich, and fall-off-the-bon tender, came with a toothsome garnish sautéed broccoli rabe and baby red beet The earthy sweetness of the latter stood u well to this robustly flavored beef. Finall mini crab cakes with basil aioli ($12.5C brought three silver-dollar-size crab cake heavy on sweet, delicate crab and mercifull light on the filler, with a piquant basil aio that suggested ingredients, intriguingl agreeable, not identified on the menu.



On an earlier visit, when the origin menu was still in force, I had the good fo tune to order the fritto misto ($10), a r markably good tempura of whole clam rock shrimp, calamari, onions and lemo slices accompanied by a well-turned parsl aioli. Unlike many fritto misto, where th calamari, the least expensive of the seafood ingredients, is often over-repr sented, this dish consisted predominant of clams and shrimp. The lemon slice coated in the same light batter and tempu fried, added an unusual, lively note that h the spot. Unfortunately, the Ruby Roo has since replaced this delightful dish wi a fritto misto containing calamari as th only shellfish (and reduced the price $9.50). Oy vey. But at least they kept th tempura-fried preserved lemon slices.

Chef Leiva does not ignore his dine sweet tooth. Desserts included espres crème brûlée ($6.50), with rich coffee fl vor and creamy texture underlying i thin, crunchy caramelized top; and roast Hawaiian pineapple and sweet banan cake ($6.50), a tropical sensation dom nated by the vibrant flavor of fresh, lu cious pineapple.



To accompany its food, the Ruby Roo offers a wine list with almost 40 selectio

45 of them by the glass. The Borgoforte Super Tuscan, by Villa Pillo ($38), which virtually exploded in the mouth with flavor, had a pleasant bouquet, good structure and a fine finish. Unfortunately, two less expensive wines did not measure up. I thought the Morande Merlot Reserve from the Maipo Valley in Chile ($31) lacking in structure, almost flabby, and the Rosé of Pinot by Westport Rivers ($27) equally undistinguished, wanting acidity (although it did display an engaging effervescence that tickled the tongue and, well chilled, provided a decent aperitif).

The Ruby Room's setting, a lounge bifurcated by large buttresses off to the side of the hotel lobby, is reasonably comfortable. For sports fans, there's a plasma-screen TV on one wall. The lounge accommodates 48 patrons at 12 bar stools, red upholstered chairs and a red banquette scattered with large pillows. A red and black tiger-striped carpet reinforces the ruby color scheme. Small round tables accommodate at most two diners, and our party of four one night required two tables to be pushed together, a request graciously obliged by our energetic waitress, who provided good service despite little assistance and a significant number of other patrons.

While obviously dedicated to serving hotel patrons, the Ruby Room's fine cuisine should attract a significant following in its own right. Surprisingly, given the informality of its surroundings, the kitchen sends forth food of reasonably consistent, high quality. The delicious sauces that Chef Leiva turned out made the restaurant's failure to serve fresh bread puzzling and disappointing. Whether dictated by Atkins principles or the fact that the small tables will not accommodate bread baskets, that deficit should be remedied. Man may not live by bread alone, but it's a good start. SWEET SIXTEEN

By now, we've used just about every excuse in the book to justify gorging on chocolate, but on October 7, the Langham Hotel's Café Fleuri needs no excuse as it celebrates the 16th season of its chocolate bar buffet. During the event, which benefits the Women's Refugee Network, participating chefs prepare a specialty dessert as well as a chocolate "showpiece" reflective of a specific region like the Asian Pacific or the United Kingdom. Guests can avoid a stomach ache by diverting their attention to the international fashion show or entering a raffle for a chance to win a trip to Cape Cod, New York or London. Sure, not everyone will win, but when there's an exorbitant amount of chocolate to eat, is anyone really a loser? *Café Fleuri, Langham Hotel, 250 Franklin St., Boston (617-956-8751). www.langhamhotels.com. Change Is Good Guild fulfilled…Carbo lode… Enter to win!!!

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Gourmet magazine executive chef Sara Moulton

Long, long ago, in the days before celebrity chefs and cable television cooking shows, seven food professionals incorporated the country's first networking group in the U.S. made up of women from every side of the culinary profession: journalists, historians, restaurateurs and writers. In 1979, the same year that the Happy Meal was introduced, the Women's Culinary Guild was founded as, "a community for women in the food industry to find jobs, education and network," recalls Sara Moulton, one of the original incorporators back when she was the chef at the former Cybele's Faneuil Hall. Today, as executive chef for Gourmet magazine and a fixture on cable TV's Food Network, Moulton is amazed by the changes in the Boston restaurant scene…and the fact that the group, now called the Culinary Guild of New England, includes men as members.

"I didn't realize that until today!" she laughed, at the guild's 25th anniversary party at UpStairs on the Square, which took place September 19. The New York Women's Culinary Alliance, designed after the blueprint of the Boston group, still doesn't let men in, according to Moulton. Maybe because Boston is, in her words, "so much friendlier for female chefs than New York".

SECOND COURSE

The Place to Jo…If we didn't tell you, you would never guess that there's a new chef de cuisine at Brasserie Jo. That's partly because Olivier Rigaud has been quietly cooking in the Brasserie Jo kitchen since long before his recent promotion, and partly because, well, the food is the same. And we mean that in the best possible sense; although Brasserie Jo isn't the first restaurant to come to mind as a destination venue, every dish on the menu is a reminder of the virtue of consistency. It's not just the marinated carrots and skinny warm baguette that set the scene. It's the sheer fresh deliciousness of the salade niçoise; the richly satisfying ham and cheese crepes, great with an Alsatian beer in chilly weather; and of course, profiteroles, presented by a waiter who pours chocolate sauce from a yellow pitcher until you say "stop."

Attention, carnivores and carbo-vores: Smith & Wollensky has opened its monument in the Castle at Park Square…Umbria, not to be confused with Caffè Umbra, is just about opened in the former Trattoria Il Panino in the Financial District. Expect simply "Umbrian" cuisine, featuring dishes such as strangozzi Umbria (homemade Umbria fusilli with mushrooms, olives, truffle cream and pecorino cheese); Kobe pork ribs braised with sofrito and chickpeas, in peppery wine sauce; rotisserie-roasted meats; and a focus on exclusive organic imported products such as honey, cheese and olive oil. Also, lots of truffles (hooray!) The executive chef is Marisa Iocco, who will retain her position at Bricco while overseeing Umbria chef de cuisine Michael Scelfo, two sous chefs, six line cooks and a pastry chef.

Finally, Name That Restaurant! Ed Doyle, the chef-about-town who's consulting with the Hotel Commonwealth folks as they develop a new brasserie-type hotel eatery, tells us the team is "back on the hunt" for a name after the latest contender, "Fens," was shot down by the partners. What, they didn't want to name their restaurant after a swampy-boggy marsh?

If you can come up with something better—and we know you can—send it to newrestaurant@hotelcommonwealth.com. If your name is the winner, says Doyle, you'll win a weekend stay at the hotel plus dinner at the new restaurant. iB

Champagne Supernova

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

The sound of corks popping is not something we usually associate with a year like 2004. Yet despite the sluggish economy, weak dollar and political uncertainties at home and abroad, we are drinking an increasing amount of Champagne. And as we turn the corner into the holiday season it appears that more and more of us are going to be reaching for the "real thing," as retailers sometimes call it. It's worth noting that French Champagne constitutes about one out of every five bottles of sparkling wine drunk in the U.S., and it's by far the most expensive entry in the whole bubbly category, with the average retail bottle costing around $30. Yet sales of Champagne continue to grow.

That's all the more impressive given the continuing downtrend in our consumption of other French wines and the "overproduction" or glut of wine that has forced producers from all over to lower their prices. Furthermore, we appear to be drinking less sparkling wine overall, but more Champagne. Champagne has been able to buck these trends because of its unique image and the quality associated with it. The wines are almost always very good, but after all, Champagne's unchallenged market position reflects the fact that it remains the beverage with which to celebrate. Of all wine categories, Champagne is probably the most brand-oriented, and in the past year all the major Champagne companies selling in the U.S. have continued to experience growth.

In restaurants, however, Champagne sales have dwindled. Part of this may have to do with the markups restaurants apply to sparkling wine in general; $65 to $80 is beyond the bounds of what many consumers will spend on a wine they consider essentially a predinner aperitif. But Champagnes are great with food. Although we rarely experience it, the wine can certainly be consumed throughout dinner, if the food complements it well. The French, who a know a thing or two about gastronomy, drink Champagne throughout the year and throughout the course of a meal.

What kind of dishes do I enjoy with Champagne? Because the predominant style of wine is acidic, somewhat toasty in aroma and ranges from citric to apple to vanilla in flavor, I find it ideal with salty-flavored dishes, smoked fish or meat, richly textured sauces, and some spicy fare. I've especially liked matching Champagnes with scallop preparations that are understated in flavor.

There are many different types of Champagne though, and some of them are more compatible with certain dishes than others. The predominant Champagne on the market is brut non-vintage, a multivintage, multigrape blend that's quite dry. Depending on whether the Champagne company incorporates more white grapes (chardonnay) in the blend or red grapes (pinot noir or pinot meunier), the brut NV, as it's known, can range from relatively light and elegant to much fuller. In general, however, these Champagnes complement lighter fish dishes beautifully.

If the wine is designated as a blanc de blancs (meaning that it's made with only white grapes), the style will be very delicate, somewhat creamy and mild. These subtle Champagnes are ideal with raw shellfish and many grain-based vegetarian dishes. If the Champagne says "blanc de noirs" on the label (meaning that it's made with only red grapes), the body will generally be heavier and the flavors more in the cherry range. I have enjoyed these fuller Champagnes with roast chicken or even roast duck preparations, as long as there are no sweet, fruity flavors on the plate.

Rosé Champagne is a real treat that remains less well known locally than it deserves to be. Most of these wines are consumed during Valentine's Day celebrations. But a top pink bubbly can work wonders paired with meatier, fleshier preparations, such as roasted monkfish, grilled swordfish or even lobster. Its tart, berry-like flavors also make a charming match with cured meats. The one combination that I've generally avoided over the years, because it's usually been disappointing, is Champagne with dessert. In general, you'll find that the best wines with sweet dishes are non-traditional-method sparkling wines that are vinified to retain their direct fruitiness and also some residual sugar. Champagnes are usually too subtle, and too dry, to match up. But if you find a rare Champagne category called "Cremant," you might try pairing it with some fruit-based desserts. IB

CityScope: Bras for a Cause

For the second year in a row, there has been a generous outpouring of support (so to speak) from celebrities for Bras for a Cause, a benefit that raises money to fight breast cancer. Several celebs have donated the unmentionables they've designed for the cause—glitterati including Heidi Klum (designer of the bra in photo, right), Whitney Houston, Kristen Davis, Lenny Clarke and Samuel L. Jackson. At the fete, sponsored by WROR-FM 105.7, partygoers can bid on the celebrity brassieres, watch a fashion show and participate in a silent auction. Tickets are $35 in advance and $45 at the door, and proceeds support the Massachusetts Breast Cancer Coalition and other organizations. Roxy, 279 Tremont St., Boston (617-376-6222). www.mbcc.org. 6-10 pm.

Performing Arts: Pas de Deux

It's been 14 years since a Boston stage has hosted the Bolshoi Ballet, which has been producing extravagant shows under various names since 1776. But this month, the famous Russian troupe brings its cadre of dancers and musicians (220 people in total) to the Wang Theatre for two back-to-back productions of ballets choreographed by Marius Petipa, the "father of classical ballet." First, there's the love story, Raymonda, set in medieval Hungary. Following is Petipa's comedic interpretation of Miguel de Cervantes' Don Quixote, which he choreographed for the Bolshoi in 1869. The full-length ballets come to the States under the direction of the Bolshoi's new artistic director, Alexei Ratmansky. Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston (800-447-7400). www.celebrityseries.org. $45–$92.

THU./OCT. 14–SUN./OCT.

Movies: Political Pictures

Right, left, red or deep blue, in just over four weeks, all of us (18 and older) will be called upon to do our civic duty and elect the next president of the United States. Whether your choice is a snap or a tough call, voting Americans can take comfort in the fact that similar decisions have been made 54 times in U.S. history. The Harvard Film Archive salutes the democratic process and the media frenzy it inspires with a series of films—documentary and fiction—that examine the modern election. Direct Democracy: The Presidential Election on Film screens nine films that consider the candidates, campaigns, conventions and election returns from the 1960s to the '90s. Primary, a documentary by Robert Drew, captures JFK and Hubert Humphrey's retail politic at the 1960 Wisconsin Democratic Primary. Kevin Rafferty and James Ridgeway's Feed compiles "down" moments featuring Bill Clinton, George H.W. Bush and Pat Buchanan taken from live satellite feeds during the 1992 election season. On the fictional side, Franklin J. Schaffner's The Best Man conveys the behind-the-scenes wheeling, dealing and backstabbing of a political convention with five characters, based loosely on real-life politicos including Richard Nixon and Barry Goldwater, vying for their party's nomination. Harvard Film Archive, 24 Quincy St., Cambridge (617-495-4700). www.harvardfilmarchive.org.

FRI.–SUN./OCT. 8–17

Performing Arts: Lords of the Rings

Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus has been around the block, 132 times to be exact. And despite PETA protests and fallout from last year's Siegfried and Roy disaster, the Greatest Show on Earth is on the road for the 133rd time—live tigers and all—and stopping for 10 days at the FleetCenter beginning October 8. If the idea of a day at the big-top seems as stale as a circus peanut, fear not: Ringling Bros. keeps things fresh. In addition to circus staples like flying trapeze artists and the clown alley, the current edition features the debut of human boomerangs the Survivors, who hurl themselves more than five stories above the arena floor. Speaking of survival, the "maestro of the menagerie," Mark Oliver Gebel performs with 10 Bengal tigers and three rings of elephants in his spankin' new act. If Maestro Mark and his (hopefully well-fed) tigers don't keep you on the edge of your seat, the promise of the mysterious Bailey's Comet might. Described as the "ultimate circus phenomenon—never before seen and never to be seen again outside of the three rings," it's hard to know what to expect, but it sounds like they've found a new way to shoot a clown out of a cannon. FleetCenter, One FleetCenter Way, Boston (617-931-2000). www.fleetcenter.com. $10-$70.

OCT. 6, 2004–JAN. 30, 2005

Museums & Galleries: Higher Concepts

While we enjoy an afternoon at the art gallery as much as the next gal, we're ready to admit that some artists' work is simply beyond us. But even if we don't operate on the same plane as certain conceptual artists, we can still appreciate those who make you wonder "How did they come up with that?" Cerith Wyn Evans is one of those guys. The British artist draws on historical figures, events and literature to create multimedia installations using objects like mirrors, neon lights, fireworks, and orchids watered with his own urine (a good example of something that makes you ask "huh?"). His first American solo show, simply titled Cerith Wyn Evans, opens at the Museum of Fine Arts on October 6 and features some of his recent works. At the exhibition entrance is Inverse, Reverse, Perverse, a large concave mirror that distorts the viewer's body. Once they've had a taste of the funhouse, visitors continue on to the main installation: seven crystal chandeliers that periodically flash Morse code messages—Evans' own selections from literature—which are translated and displayed on computer screens embedded in the gallery walls. 465 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-267-9300). www.mfa.org. Free with museum admission.

Rallying for Rosie's Place

Sex and the City star returns to Boston.

It's been about six months since Sex and the City went off the air, but Bostonian Mario Cantone's career has continued to blossom. Cantone, who played Anthony Marentino on SATC, just finished up a stint with the Broadway hit Assassins, and he's about to go back out on Broadway with his one-man show Laugh Whore. In between, he returns to his hometown to headline at the annual fall benefit for Rosie's Place, "Funny Women... Serious Business," on October 14.

Sex and the City star and Boston native Mario Cantone appears at the benefit luncheon for Rosie's Place.

Cantone performs standup comedy at the luncheon at the Copley Marriott Hotel, and organizers are hoping to schedule a meet-and-greet with guests. He's subbing for fellow SATC star Cynthia Nixon, who won't appear in person, as originally planned, but will take part via video conferencing in a panel discussion along with WBZ-4's Lisa Hughes and Sarah Underwood, and other women in Boston media about some of the funny and not so funny aspects of being a woman.

The goal of this year's luncheon is to raise $300,000 for Rosie's Place, the nation's first drop-in shelter for women and an organization dedicated to helping poor and homeless women maintain their pride and strive for success. Don your favorite Manolo Blahniks and go spend your lunchtime showing support for a good cause.

Marriott Copley Hotel, 110 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-318-0223). MBTA: Green Line to Copley. www.rosies.org. Oct. 14, 12-2 pm. $125. —Rich Levine

Wild at Heart

I [Heart] Huckabees pumps out the laughs.

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Is there any way to wring something meaningful out of this frantic, chaotic life? That's the question driving Albert Markovski (Jason Schwartzman), the troubled hero at the center of David O. Russell's wild-eyed comedy I [Heart] Huckabees. Albert is so puzzled by his three coincidental run-ins with a tall African doorman (Ger Duany) that he hires "existential detectives" Vivian (Lily Tomlin) and Bernard Jaffe (Dustin Hoffman) to examine his life and tell him what it all means.

Jason Schwartzman (left) is the troubled environmentalist who hires existential detectives.

Of course, Albert's quest for purpose is the same sort of itch that's motivated characters in frenzied, funny Russell films including Flirting with Disaster, in which Ben Stiller's adopted character tries to find his birth parents, and Three Kings, in which four U.S. soldiers try to come out of the first Gulf War with something more positive than damaged worldviews. Russell's world is a chaotic one in which characters are forced to face up to their place in it, sometimes willingly, sometimes not. In the case of Albert and I [Heart] Huckabees, our hero is somewhat willing, but he's not prepared to be pulled into the rabbit hole by the existential detectives.

To the Jaffes, who believe that, as Bernard puts it, "everything is connected, everything matters," looking into someone's life is a no-holds-barred proposition. So the married couple starts conspicuously spying on Albert, even at his work at the Open Spaces Coalition, which he asked them to steer clear of. Open Spaces is an anti-sprawl environmentalist group that Albert leads, but to which he's desperately clinging, since Brad Stand (Jude Law), a charismatic junior executive at the rapidly expanding chainstore Huckabees, has elbowed his way in as part of a scheme to undermine the group's protests against the chain. Brad has started to co-opt the organization's rank-and-file with dubious sales pitches about the store's dedication to the environment.

In Albert's tussle with Brad, the Jaffes find the real source of Albert's discontent, and Albert's case spills over into several others. For moral support, the Jaffes buddy him up with another client, Tommy (a very funny Mark Wahlberg), a firefighter obsessed with rampant petroleum use. They also sign up Brad as a client (albeit a half-hearted one) and get involved in the life of his initially bubbly girlfriend Dawn (Naomi Watts), Huckabees' blonde bombshell poster girl, and soon the spiffy façade of Brad and Dawn's model life together starts to crack. There's also Catherine Vauban (Isabelle Huppert), a French rival to the Jaffes who believes nothing is connected and gets Albert to rebel against them. She sends him on poisonous encounters with both his parents (Bob Gunton and Talia Shire, Schwartzman's real mom) and the adoptive family of the African doorman (including pricelessly acidic Richard Jenkins of Six Feet Under).

In other words, I [Heart] Huckabees ricochets around like a pinball, and just about every direction it heads in is hilarious. It doesn't have the power or the in-your-face ambition of Three Kings (few movies do), but it's undeniably a David O. Russell film. This time, the emphasis is on absurdity, and the movie provides plenty of absurd moments to remember: Albert and Tommy whacking each other in the head with a small Hoppity-Hop to numb themselves, as instructed by Catherine; a muddy bit of romantic foreplay; and a cockeyed cameo by Shania Twain, the middle-of-the-road celebrity whose approval Brad and Huckabees repeatedly crave.

Amongst all its turmoil, I [Heart] Huckabees also lets its cast collide in off-kilter performances. Schwartzman, last seen headlining the TV sitcom Cracking Up, again does well as the earnest, bemused guy at the center of the turmoil, while the interplay between Tomlin and Hoffman as the obsessive husband and wife who don't think twice about invading your life (and your garbage and your home and anything else you call yours) is worth the price of admission. And as the "successful" lookers whose insecurities start seeping through, Law and Watts show comic talent they've never tapped before.

Beneath the lively comedy, I [Heart] Huckabees also does something unusual for a current film: It asks you to think. In this case, about whether the Jaffes' theories about our psychic, physical and emotional connections make sense, or whether anyone else's theories make sense either. I [Heart] Huckabees never stops to get preachy or to push any particular point of view—its message is ultimately to explore theories and then find your own path—but its blend of entertainment and self-examination is certainly distinctive. Frankly, the title doesn't make a whole lot of sense, but there's a lot to love in the movie. iB

It's been a long time since Multiple Maniacs, Joh Waters' 1970 comedy in which the heroes pe formed in a rebellious traveling "Cavalcade of Pe version." If his new movie, in which Baltimore blu collar sex addicts are the heroes, had been mad then, it might have worked. But nowadays, whe sex is used to sell everything and is everywhere i the media (from Stern to Springer to Spears), seems awfully passé. That's part of the reason th laughs are sparse and only a few characters are cor sistently amusing (mainly Suzanne Shepherd as th crusty leader of the "decency" forces fighting the se addicts and Jackie Hoffman as one of the more cr ative sexaholics). Too much of the movie just seem sophomoric. (At Coolidge Corner and Kenda Square.)

Donnie Darko: The Director's Cut ★★½

If it ain't broke, don't fix it. Writer-director Richar Kelly's brilliant Donnie Darko returns—not in th version that struck an emotional chord in so man despite being barely marketed in 2001, but in Do nie Darko: The Director's Cut, a new version ru ning 20 minutes longer. Except this isn't a true "d rector's cut"; this 133-minute version never existe before now. If you haven't seen Donnie Darko, th original version is a better introduction; if yo have, you've probably seen the added stuff alread Most of the "restored" footage comes from delete scenes on the Donnie Darko DVD. Meanwhil Kelly has also gone back and changed some of th songs to what he originally wanted, but couldn't a ford in the budget. But wait a minute. Kelly orig nally wanted U2's "MLK" at the climax, n Michael Andrews and Gary Jules' unforgettab haunting version of Tears for Fears' "Mad World which became a surprise hit. So why didn't he p place that too? Kelly should have remained satisfi with the other happy accidents in his movie as we (Midnight shows at Coolidge Corner.)

Fahrenheit 9/11 ★★★½

Rabble-rouser Michael Moore's passionate deco struction of the second Bush administration has r knockout revelations about its controversial pol cies, so don't expect smoking guns. Its ultimate ta get is the war in Iraq, but the movie presents th war as just the latest in a pattern of self-servin law-skirting behavior. Moore comes up with i spired ways of getting his points across abo much-debated Bush policies and conflicts of inte est. He's onscreen less than he was in Roger & M The Big One and Bowling for Columbine, yet he a gues such points better than in Columbine. Moo hits his targets because, despite his political aim he makes you feel like you're watching a movi not a political rant, and his sense of humor real shines through. (At Boston Common, Harva Square and suburbs.)

Garden State ★★½

The first film by actor-director Zach Braff (TV Scrubs) has its moments of daffy humor, as Bra plays a struggling L.A. actor who returns to his Ne Jersey hometown for the first time in nine years. recaptures the mixed emotions of such a visit, esp cially of seeing old high school friends, but it trea on very familiar territory. It feels like it wants to be version of The Graduate directed by Wes Anders (Rushmore), and it struggles to find any voice of i own. Plus, the story of a guy returning to his hom town who develops a quick bond with a Natal Portman character has already been done, in 199 Beautiful Girls. Braff and Portman have a pleasi chemistry, and Braff is to be commended for tryi to make something quirky and personal. But it's ha not to feel this movie is redundant. (At Bost Common, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Hero ★★★

Zhang Yimou's drama is the dreamiest martial ar movie since Wong Kar Wai's Ashes of Time, wi which it shares stars Tony Leung Chiu Wai and Ma gie Cheung. This period piece about feudal Chi soars during its creative fight scenes, though the pr duction design regularly gets out of hand (son scenes are so superficially "pretty" they look like pe fume commercials). The title character played by J Li can also be as inexpressive as a compulsive Bost patient. But this is ambitious stuff, and the figh scenes and larger-than-life drama, fueled mostly Cheung's performance, often pay off handsome (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

mob had been extorting money from film productions). In this fictionalized account, Alec Baldwin is very funny as the FBI agent who pretends to be a producer in order to nab a Providence mafioso (Tony Shalhoub), while Matthew Broderick is the unsuspecting aspiring writer whose script goes into preproduction but never gets out of it. Writer-director Jeff Nathanson cleverly spoofs Hollywood, in the form of the FBI's Hollywood etiquette "tutor" (Joan Cusack) and the movie-within-a-movie's self-involved star (Toni Collette). But this is also a very affectionate tribute to the seductive charms of movies, as both the agent and the writer, who's charmed into making dozens of compromises (like filming Arizona action in Little Rhody), have their movie dreams grow too large to be stopped by the enormous complications that arise. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Late Risers Club ★★★

College radio is one of the best things about Boston, and WMBR's Late Risers Club has been one of the most influential college radio shows, especially during the late 1970s and early '80s, when it played punk bands that commercial radio totally ignored. The show pioneered the idea—which is now a given—of college radio championing music from the fringe. Local filmmaker Marissa Acosta's documentary, which gets a work-in-progress screening, covers those early years, and it colorfully captures the way the show really was an indispensable part of the local music scene in the days of La Peste, the Neighborhoods and pre-reunion, pre-breakup Mission of Burma. Stay tuned. (At the Boston Public Library, Oct. 18.)

Resident Evil 2: Apocalypse ★½

The first one was an obnoxious mish-mash of Aliens and Night of the Living Dead starring stiff Milla Jovovich. The second lifts from yet more sci-fi/horror sources, but unlike 28 Days Later or Shaun of the Dead, adds little to its borrowed elements. Even more unnecessary than most sequels. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Rick ★★

This underachieving indie comedy transposes the opera Rigoletto to present-day Wall Street, and its brutal take on office behavior (with no one showing their true emotions) hits home more than its story, a long-winded affair about murder, mistaken identity, lust and envy with frustrated Rick O'Lette (Bill Pullman) at its center. By the time the plot takes all of its twists and turns, most of the comic momentum of the early action has long since fizzled away. (At the Brattle Theatre, Oct. 8-10.)

Shaun of the Dead ★★★

This zombie comedy isn't just a horror spoof à la Scream, it's a movie about funny characters. Director and cowriter Edgar Wright knows how to set up gags and put them across, and horror has nothing to do with his characters' amusing habits, like saying "What's that supposed to mean?" to glaringly obvious accusations. Like the zombies that slowly surround him and his circle of friends, the title character of this very funny English comedy springs back to life over the course of the movie. Shaun (co-writer Simon Pegg) is an affable bloke whose lack of ambition finds him stuck at a job requiring a name tag, and whose lack of romantic inspiration finds him dumped by girlfriend Liz (Kate Ashfield). But when zombies walk the streets of London, Shaun leads the survivors (to the pub, of course). Shots are fired, flesh is ripped, friends are mourned and, somewhere along the way, Liz is perhaps convinced that Shaun has left his feckless ways behind him. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Silver City ★★

Part political satire and part thriller, John Sayles' latest is unsatisfying on both levels. It usually falls short because the cheesy satire gets in the way of the more interesting thriller. That satire casts Chris Cooper as Dubya-like Dickie Pilager (that's right, pronounced "pillager"), dim-witted scion of the Pilager political family. It's obvious, it's lazy, we've seen it before and, as Fahrenheit 9/11 showed, the real thing is more freakishly amusing. The thriller essentially retreads Chinatown in its tale of Western political corruption for economic gain from natural resources. Although Danny O'Brien (Danny Huston), the private eye and lapsed idealist at the heart of the thriller, is an interesting character to watch as his idealism is rekindled, a half movie doesn't leave him much room to grow. (At Copley Place, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Sky Captain and the World of Tomorrow ★★

This retro-futuristic action-adventure—using computer-generated special effects to re-create a late-1930s concept of science fiction—is the PT Cruiser of movies. It seems kinda neat at first, but you steadily realize it's just another mediocre new product. The trouble with this story about a reporter

Angelina Jolie, Jude Law and Gwyneth Paltrow fight the bad guys in Sky Captain and the World of Tomorrow.

(Gwyneth Paltrow) and aviator (Jude Law) who thwart a doomsday scheme is that however straight-faced and authentic it promises to be, it's too much like the many other movies that have taken inspiration from the same place (this is especially true of Edward Shearmur's music, which sounds cringingly like John Williams' scores, and the revival of Angelina Jolie's dreadful Lara Croft English accent). Paltrow and Law have little zing together (maybe George Clooney might have pulled off the hardness and humor of the dashing title role), and ultimately this comes off like a disappointing attempt at Raiders of the Lost Ark–style homage. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

What the Bleep Do We Know? ★★

It's different, all right, but that's not always a good thing in this new-agey blend of documentary and drama. The documentary has some generally interesting scientific theorizing about the way the body perceives the world and about the effects of emotion on cells. But the interesting stuff is married to goofy animation and, even worse and even goofier, dramatic sequences starring Marlee Matlin as a two-timed photographer who undergoes an attitude adjustment. These scenes are as clunky as an airline safety video. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

The Yes Men ★★★

Back in Action

Camper Van Beethoven builds on its eclectic legacy with an ambitious return.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Camper Van Beethoven always had a reputation for playfully railing against the times, in terms of both musical style and subject matter. Through the late '80s, the California-born band turned the "college rock" landscape topsy-turvy with such oddities as the jaunty "Take the Skinheads Bowling" and a cover of Status Quo's '60s hit "Pictures of Matchstick Men," mixing violin into its warped pop vision.

The group splintered in the wake of its more streamlined 1989 album, Key Lime Pie. But members still crossed paths in a wide and weird post-Camper world that included projects with Sparklehorse, Eugene Chadbourne and Monks of Doom, as well as the still-active Cracker, the country-edged rock band that brought singer-guitarist David Lowery broader exposure with the early-'90s radio hits "Euro-Trash Girl," "Low" and "Teen Angst (What the World Needs Now)."

Camper Van Beethoven's world tour brings them to Boston October 16.

Not that all this background prepares a listener for the eclectic New Roman Times, Camper Van Beethoven's first new album in 15 years. On the 67-minute CD, which hits stores Oct. 12 (four days before a show at the Middle East), the classic CVB lineup of Lowery, violinist Jonathan Segel, bassist Victor Krummenacher, guitarist Greg Lisher and drummer Chris Pederson veers from syncopated jazz-rock reminiscent of the Dixie Dregs to twisted arena rock, country psychedelia and Balkanized reggae, as well as diversions into snappy klezmer and Tex-Mex flavors.

"We hoped to do something that was kind of outrageous," says Lowery, "like, 'Wow, look what Camper did! Can you believe that's what they came back and did?' It's sort of a prog-rock opera concept record. But it's clearly not just that. It's a little bit of the post-punk, ska, hillbilly psychedelia stuff that we have dealt with. We stitched it together in this admittedly loose narrative. You can't really follow the story the way you could [the Who's] Tommy. It's probably closer to Frank Zappa than to the Who."

In other words, the story line is all over the map at least as much as the music. Fictional, but with a clear target in the Bush administration, New Roman Times traces the story of a juvenile delinquent–turned–soldier from the Fundamentalist Christian Republic of Texas who fights for a foreign legion, only to return home with loss of limb and personal direction. "But the whole thing involves drugs and space aliens," adds Lowery, "because it's a Camper Van Beethoven record. It can't be that serious."

"Bringing new meaning to the term 'alt-country,' it's an alternate version of our country," he says from his home in Richmond, Va. "There's a loose alignment between liberal California and Christian Fundamentalist Texas, a sort of conflict between those states, which is our way of talking about the gulf between the red [Republican] and the blue [Democratic] parts of the country—and not just the states. Richmond is in Virginia, which is a red state, but Richmond is a blue town full of Kerry and Dean stickers."

As for the title New Roman Times, he says, "Every 20 to 40 years, the United States goes through some experiment with imperialism that ends badly, and you could say that we're in a period like that. But I would point out that the experiment in Iraq has gone so badly, I doubt this sort of adventurism would happen again, so you could say that this period of imperialism is already over with. But maybe not."

Some conservatives have even misjudged Camper Van Beethoven to be Libertarians, says Lowery, referencing the band's roots in California. "That was kind of a big thing in Santa Cruz when we were growing up there. So a lot of people from the right have been a little surprised by our clearly anti-war stance. But it's told through the eyes of a soldier, so it's complex. My father was in the military. I grew up on military bases. So it's a complex view of myself.

"I hope it all sounds coherent," he says, "that what we've done is just exaggerate what we were doing before, because Camper was always more of a methodology than a specific sound. The sound came out of the mix of our personalities. The methodology was that we'd take a little of this and this and that and try to mix it together, and if it came out wrong, our personality was inserted into the process."

There's certainly a load of personality in New Roman Times, but devoted Camper fans shouldn't be let down by the band's marathon live playlist. "We play the old and the new," says Lowery, whose quintet reunited in 2000 and rediscovered its chemistry on the road, including a previous stop at the Middle East. "We do have to pay attention to our legacy." iB

improperimpersonals

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space and clarity.) Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a pen or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to type up e-mailed messages) and write to:

Vegas Hottie

To the hottie on the flight to Vegas September 3, we sat next to each other on the flight. You live in Newton and do pharmaceutical sales. It was your first trip to Vegas. I hope you had fun. I would've liked to chat on the way home, but couldn't for obvious reasons (the GF).

Thanks for Nothing

For so long I tried to be the bigger person but when I saw you last month, my anger came flooding back. I couldn't help myself. My PG-13 diss to you should never have been censored because you suck as a person. Get a dictionary. You need to look up several words: "Tact," because you have none. "Empathy," because someday you'll need it extended to you. And finally, "selfish"—and if your picture isn't already posted there, please feel free to do so.

Who knows if your new clique has unraveled your game of winning sympathy through your harrowing stories about your persecuted life. True, you had a lot to deal with, but you act as though life's struggles are solely yours to bear.

Some advice: Whatever guy jaded you so long ago—let it go! Move on, because he did. If you're tired of your family using you, then stand up to them. If you want guys to stop treating you like a one-night stand, stop acting like a two-trick pony. Finally, your constant negativity is so oppressing. You make people walk on eggshells while juggling.

As far as talking shit about me, you don't know me. You never did. I was merely an opportunity—a sounding board for yourself. You were never my friend. F.Y.I., I have a really good job and some real friends. And of course you know nothing of my boyfriend because the only pertinent personal information was your own. Remember?

Still, I want to thank you. Thank you for your absence—it's been a blessing.

—AI

To the Girls in the Parking Lot in Watertown

You opened your car door into Blanche, my beloved pepper-white 2003 Mini Cooper, leaving a painfully obvious dent in the driver's side door. My husband (who was driving my car that day) saw you from his office window. He didn't think twice about how you two were looking at the car; he thought you were admiring it. Only after he went to retrieve his cell phone an hour later did he realize what you were really looking at. FYI, leaving a note would have been the right thing to do, ladies (and I use that term loosely). Maybe one day you'll be mature enough to take responsibility for your mistakes. In the meantime, we know what you look like, we'll be looking for you—and we will find you.

—Blanche's Mama

A Poet Who Knows It No. 1

Time is running out, and you and I are not on the same route. How can you let me slip away from you when all I want to do is devote my life to you? Why do I love you? Why do I care? For you, a man without whom I have no air. My patience is wearing thin; do I stay or do I go? It is up to you my darling; hurry up and put me in the know!

—makeupyourmind23@yahoo.com

To the Teen at the Orange Line State Street Stop

It was 1:30 pm on Sept. 21. Your good will, spirit and outstanding outlook on life will take you far. I watched you, you who are physically challenged, give up your seat for a blind rider while others—at their physical best—just looked on. Giving up your seat is something we should all do for those who need and deserve it, but additional well wishes to you as you clearly didn't see yourself as someone needing the reserved seat!

Beacon Hill Babies

Last Friday night I attended a party in Beacon Hill (I know, it sounds crazy so far) with some of my friends who are all professionals and have been out of college for some time now. Including the person having the party, we totaled a whopping five people. Some of us stepped outside to have a smoke when we heard yelling and screaming of obscenities from across the street. Whoever it was (we don't know the identity of the person or persons since they didn't have the class to come down and speak with us face-to-face) wanted the music turned down and other requests that I can't repeat. Here are my problems with this request: 1. It's Friday—normal people tend to have drinks and get together with friends and have a good time on Friday. 2. It was around 9:30 in the evening. 3. The music wasn't even loud. 4. You live in the city in Beacon Hill, where such a thing as city noise comes with the neighborhood. If you can't afford a house in Maine to get away from the hustle and bustle of the city, close your windows, otherwise stop your whining. Finally, if only they would have walked outside to speak with us, I'm sure we could have worked something out that would have made everyone happy. Who knows, they could have even had some drinks and made some new friends, but I guess if I had no life and was home alone on a Friday night at 9:30 and no one had invited me to a party, I could see where one might become bitter. I can only hope that the person or persons make some friends soon. Until the next Friday night party, work hard and play even harder. Sincerely,

—Someone with a pacifier

Sunday, September 5

I met you at the Nashua Beach Bar in Laconia, N.H. Your name is Shawn and you have a brother named JJ. We chatted a bit and you had me sniff your cologne. You said you were from Brighton, I think. I gave you my cell-phone number. You called the next day saying you were heading back to Boston and asked if we could get together for dinner. You asked me to call you back but I couldn't, because you used a restricted phone line and didn't leave a number. If you read this and are still interested, please try calling again and leave a number. If you've tossed my number, which I'm sure you have, please call the Nashua and ask for my friend Cynthia with the long, black hair (the one who introduced us). She'll put us in touch.

A gorgeous redhead came into sight; all night we danced and drank. When I left without getting your number my heart sank. From this day forward I will be a hunter. For my red-headed dancer at Punters. Amber my sweet, I hope we once more meet. With my fingers crossed tight I hope that you write. Your Irish Fred Astaire,

Silver Convertible Blonde

You were in your silver Mercedes CLK320 convertible with New York plates. I was in my black SUV. We followed each other on the Mass. Pike for over an hour, the reflection of your beautiful eyes in your review mirror the only thing keeping me sane in the ridiculous Sunday traffic. I can't get the picture of your long blond hair out of my mind. We waved and smiled to each other as we went through the tolls, but I would love to thank you in person for being my guide and sanity saver. Next time I'll lead!

OCTOBER 6–19, 2003

LIBRA SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

You're bewitched, bothered and bewildered once again—and probably on a much grander scale than the last time! Illusion-filled Neptune is busily strewing magical fairy dust in your direction, so although you can successfully handle the ensuing confusion and avoid the hype, you know enough not to bank on fulfilling anybody's overblown expectations. However, nobody says you can't have faith and hope or perform acts of charity during these fascinating periods of high idealism and creativity.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Something that seems suspicious or not quite aboveboard about the scene at home or among other family members could come to light this week. That means the funny smell in the kitchen can be traced back to its source, or your sister's strange behavior might be explained, maybe even justified. The reasons that are revealed won't impact on you personally; still, it wouldn't hurt to know that you're more impressionable, more locked into group-think right now than your cynical self usually permits. And your team is…?

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

You could be a bit nervous about your permanent address; better get used to it. The question marks put there by unpredictable Uranus won't be erased anytime soon. Anyway, you may find a quasi-romantic reason to visit someplace new or to check out a potential relocation destination. Meanwhile, your career seems to be developing along less stressful lines. Still, you should be somewhat wary because nebulous Neptune in your house of income earned is presently lit. Something fishy could be brewing.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

No guarantee, but you might have a huge hit on your hands if you give the more glamorous aspects of your gig free rein as well as an appropriate, acceptable spin. Although there may be a whiff of scam attached to the chosen project, it's just as likely to be hailed as an inspiring act of faith. Obviously delusional Neptune is the planet calling the shots this week, so don't venture too far into never-never land or take yourself too seriously. You may have to answer for any transgressions midmonth when your Saturn ruler and you are challenged.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

You could turn into a figurehead, the personification of an ideal or the perpetrator of a scam when mystical Neptune in your sign gets the full treatment this week. It won't help your reputation to play "oblivious" or claim to be confused by what is going down. In light of this miasma, try to stay on track and true to your personal point of view. On the other hand, the image created by those with whom you share a financial interest could work to your advantage, especially if you're an actor or musician feeding off fantasies.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Starring roles can come to those Fish who are genuinely unprepared. While it's your Neptune ruler that's drawing so much attention from the amenable Libra planets, the element of surprise, the shocker in this scenario is unpredictable Uranus in your sign. Between two powerful planetary energies, you're bound to find a place, a position that suits you. Just be aware that a lot of people are counting on your abilities to satisfy their expectations. As regards a romantic interest, flip a coin.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Go ahead and let your enthusiasm run away with you. It'll be another 12 years until your Mars ruler merges with expansive Jupiter in your Libra house of partners again. How many opportunities can you pass on before the potential for profit and growth generated by the dynamic duo is gone? This month it's a glamorous, artistic or charitable project that'll have the strongest appeal, but keep an eye out for the bullshit factor. The best of intentions can be misinterpreted when illusionary Neptune makes the pitch.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Less accepting, more demanding: Watch how your attitude can change when your Venus ruler switches signs from open-hearted Leo to picky, practical Virgo. Nothing slips past your critical gaze, especially stuff around the house. During the next three weeks it'll be a pleasure to replace the old or malfunctioning with the new and improved. Even formerly beloved items may have to go. Your social life—the fun-and-games part, anyway—could actually improve while four high-energy planets cavort through romantic Libra.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Is air-sign-friendly Libra the one time of the year the family doesn't present a problem, or do you also get a break around Valentine's Day? Is your astute Mercury ruler too busy evaluating the offerings of the new season to argue with them? Nonetheless, Twins born in May might be distracted by a sudden change of heart when Venus confronts erratic Uranus on the 6th. The others are relatively safe, albeit quite impressionable, because they're being unduly influenced by nebulous Neptune. Hopeful, yes; accurate, maybe.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

Scoot out of your shell and discover another pleasure in your neighborhood. The domesticated Crab is currently under the influence of a charming, civilized Libra vibe that's drawing you closer to an important growth experience. Of course, you'll wind up all the wiser for the interaction, but you could also become invigorated (both physically and psychologically) by what you'll discover about yourself and your neighbors. You might not turn into one big happy family, but you will forge a valuable connection.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

No matter what you currently think of them, whether they're being helpful, hopeful or misguided, your present and past business and life partners can be intrinsically tied into your own financial well-being. Ultimately everything should turn out fine because generous Jupiter is protecting your assets; however, you may have to lay out a small fortune now to ensure a bigger return. Pay close attention to the money coming in and going out, and follow your intuition while Mercury and your sun ruler meet midweek.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Since both signs are tuned into the same wavelength this week, chances are you'll find yourself bonding with a Lion. Whenever the sun, Leo's ruler, and Mercury, your ruling planet, conjunct, the natives hear the same drum beating and get the same message. While you might not experience a gut reaction in the true physical sense, you know there's an intuitive force guiding you toward making one decision over another or, just as likely, advising you to bide your time until you come across more information.

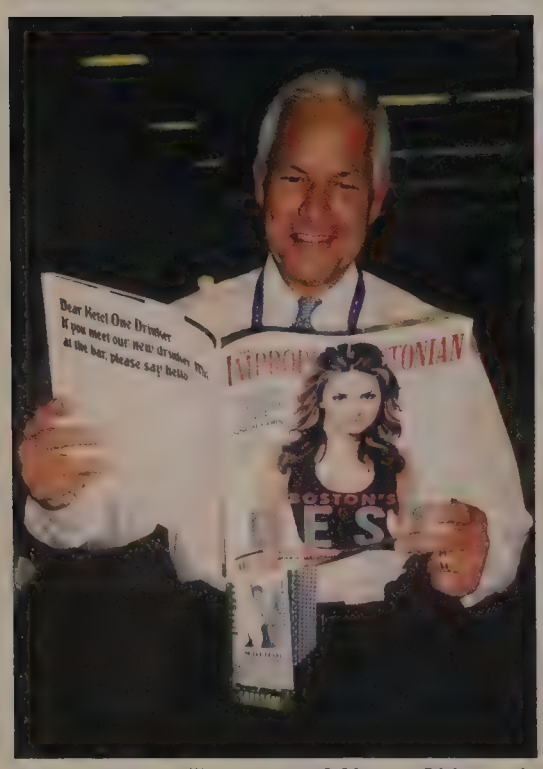
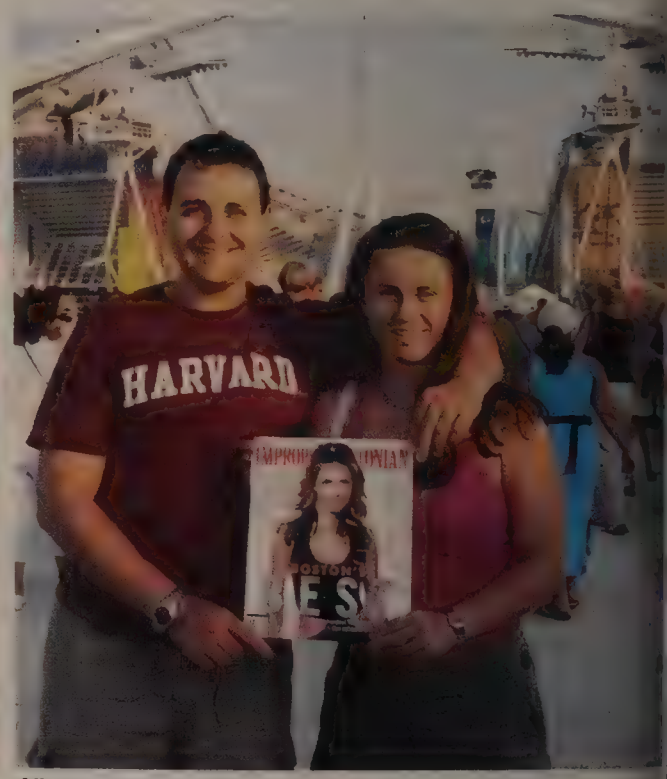
UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.



Juozas Parutis, Jonas Stundzia and Zilvinas Didziapetris visited the Frank Zappa memorial statue in Vilnius, Lithuania. That's a pretty normal statue for a guy who named his kids Dweezil and Moon Unit.

Kate Hagstrom and Pat Kelly model the season's hottest new arctic wear aboard the USCGC Healy in the Chukchi Sea, Arctic Ocean.



Katie Moser and Jennifer Morreale pose before a startling rock formation in Keystone, S.D. Notice the cliff directly above bears a remarkable resemblance to Jeremy Piven.

Donald Plusquellic, mayor of Akron, Ohio, and president of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, catches up on the best stuff in Tommy M's city.

Kevin McKenna says that the scene that he caused at the phone booths in Kingston upon Thames, England, is nothing compared to what happened when he visited the Porta-Johns.

Alberto Costa and Maria I. Psatha toted an IMPROPER to the Olympics in Athens, Greece. Now that the Olympics are over, the building behind them is being used as a dog track.

EAT IT UP, WASH IT DOWN

THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN's Fall Dining Issue will take you on a culinary tour of autumn's finest cuisine. First, we will cover some delicious North End haunts that don't get all the attention they so richly deserve. Next, we'll dip into fondue. This hot 'n' gooey trend is a hit at many local restaurants. We'll also look at life as a waitress: How do they sling the hash when the dogs are barking?

THIS ISSUE IS GOOD TO THE LAST DROP!

THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN reaches over 392,900 readers every two weeks.

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At From Fenway to the Runway, top: Sara Underwood and her daughter, Emma. Middle row: Manny Ramirez Sr. and Jr.; Chris Meyers, Esti Parsons and Michael Schlow. Bottom row: Peggy Henry and Stacey Lucchino; Smaiyra Million and Lisa Hughes.

FORGET PEANUTS AND CRACKER JACK; BUY ME SOME HAUTE COUTURE...

As if anyone needed further proof that behind every great man there's a great woman, the Red Sox Wives and the shops at Heritage on the Garden teamed up to host From Fenway to the Runway, a fashion show and luncheon to benefit the women's cancer center at Dana-Farber.

Held at Via Matta, the super-swanky event attracted the likes of stunning blonde owners' wives Peggy Henry and Stacey Lucchino; Channel 4 uber-babes Lisa Hughes and Sara Underwood (with infant daughter Emma Felger, making her first public appearance); restaurateurs Chris Myers, Esti Parsons and Michael Schlow; cancer researcher Dr. Kornelia Polyak; stunning brunette Kim Druker Stockwell; Bond girl (with the exotic name, to boot) Smaiyra Million of the Sports Club L.A.; Red Sox radio voice Joe Castiglione; Boston first lady Angela Menino; NESN's Jayme Parker; and the stars of the afternoon—such players' wives as Juliana Ramirez, Karen Varitek, Tiffany Ortiz, Kathryn Nixon, Shonda Schilling and Aimee Arroyo, to name only a few.

A handful of Red Sox players themselves (Trot Nixon, Manny Ramirez, Jason Varitek and Johnny Damon among them) put in a brief appearance, several toting their kids, and they received applause only slightly more enthusiastic than the fashions by such designers as Anne Fontaine, Escada, Marina Rinaldi, St. John, Sonia Rykiel and Hermes.

Following lunch, a live auction raised oodles of badly needed dinero for Dana-Farber. For a lucky few, however, the afternoon's highlight came when a basket of baseballs was passed around and those who chose one with the letters NYY written in red received tickets to a Red Sox–Yankees game.

This being a well-behaved (not to mention well-dressed) crowd, no one stooped to chanting "Yankees suck!"—even after chef Michael Schlow confessed to being a loyal New York fan.

"That's OK," said one guest. "You don't have to be smart to be a good cook."

SATURDAY IN THE PARK WITH GEORGE...

Anyone who runs, bikes, blades or simply lazes along the Esplanade was the unwitting beneficiary of Moondance, a black-tie fund-raiser hosted by the Esplanade Association to raise money for the park's preservation and enhancement.

Held beneath a giant white tent near the Arthur Fiedler statue, the evening began with drinks and mingling and continued with dinner, dessert and dancing, not to mention the throwing around of large sums of money.

Present and accounted for: event chairs Jeryl and Steve Oristaglio; Shelly and Ofer Nemirovsky and Cynthia and Michael George; ex-CIA director George Tenet and his wife, Stephanie; glamazon Jennifer Winn; Boston Ballet honcho Mikko Nissinen; patroness of the arts Pamela Humphrey; party pair Randi and Joel Cutler; the magnificent Carolina Tress Balsbaugh; travel titans Alan and Harriet Lewis; blonde bombshell Anna Cheshire Levitan; prominent Newtonians Steve and Barbara Grossman; the irresistible duo of Wendy and Chip Pierce; Back Bay social fixtures Steve and Lois Kunian; fashion plate Erin Gilligan and her husband, Hoyle Kim; bright young things Jean Robert and Laird Elting; and flower moguls Simone and Ted Winston. Then there was the woman whose advice for curing a broken heart consisted of "taking a hit of ecstasy and taking out your contact lenses," and a guy who claimed to have caught a 46-inch striped bass off the coast of Martha's Vineyard, prompting a nearby female to mutter, "He's a man. They always exaggerate about size."

The food was superb and the band kept everyone on their feet—as one prominent socialite put it, "You know the music's good when my husband is dancing...and with me, no less."

However, the undeniable highlight of the evening occurred during the live auction, when two big-spenders bid $45,000 each to have George Tenet come to their homes for dinner.

"Shouldn't he be on trial for war crimes in the Hague?!" wondered one guest.

"I bid $46,000 but nobody saw me," joked another.

"I wonder if it's open bar," said a third.

Meanwhile, with a completely straight face, another woman said, "45 grand? For that much, I'd expect him to bring Saddam Hussein with him." IB

At Moondance, top: Lisa and Alex Pierpont and Chip Pierce. Second row from top: Maggie and Jonathan Seelig; Carolina Tress Balsbaugh. Third row from top: Dan Mathieu and Randi and Joel Cutler; Michael and Courtney Forrester and Nicole and Jeff Bellows. Bottom: Hoyle Kim, Erin Gilligan and Laird Elting and Jean Robert.

TASTE TESTING

For IMPROPER staffers, one of the best things about preparing our twice-yearly dining issues is the research. To gather info for her story on fondue's reemergence in Boston, managing editor Erin Hagedorn skewered and dunked her way through five local restaurants, regaling us with tales of creamy cheese and warm chocolate.

Meanwhile, our art staff made important expeditions to our cover model Joanne Chang's Flour Bakery + Café in the South End. Both art director and photo editor swiftly developed what we all recognized as a full-on addiction to Chang's roast beef sandwiches (made mighty by crispy onions and spicy horseradish) and homemade "Oreo" cookies. (They still talk of them in ardent tones and then disappear at lunchtime.)

For their stories on the North End's hidden gems and on local sommeliers, writers Ruth Tobias and Judith Gaines got into the act too, sipping and munching in the name of journalism.

Why do we go to these lengths? We do it for you, of course.

WORST SUPERHERO FACTS...EVER

Kudos to William Orem on winning your fiction contest (Literary Issue, Oct. 6). But, alas, no kudos to Orem for badly fumbling his research. For instance, the Flash wasn't "given a magic ring," and Doctor Spectrum can't "do magic," and Yellow Claw can't "blast rays," and Superman would have to use his heat vision, not his X-ray vision, to melt a tire. All of which is super-geeky to point out, yes—unless the author's main character is supposed to be a super-geek who would never get any of this stuff wrong. So what—Orem wanted to write his story but was too cool to actually learn about his subject matter? Holy condescension, Batman!

CF-OH NO YOU DIDN'T

Like the staff at the IMPROPER, the editorial staff here at Boston-based CFO magazine thinks Susan Orlean is very cool. But so is her growing family—more so than suggested by the out-of-date reference to her husband as "an investment banker" (Soroff/On, Oct. 6).

For the past three years, Orlean's husband, John Gillespie, has been a chief financial officer (hence our interest here at CFO). His Boston-based company, the Mentor Network, provides care and lodging for the developmentally disabled, [illegible]-injured adults, and abused and [illegible]ed children. As we described in [illegible]t issue, he's also at the [illegible]d a movement to prove [illegible]n fulfill a humanitarian [illegible]s can still provide reasonable [illegible] for shareholders.

We bet their kid will turn out pretty cool too.

WE HATE BEN MEZRICH?

So who does a guy have to kiss up to around here to get a little love from the IMPROPER? Once again I opened up your Literary Issue hoping that this time, my book would finally get a bit of notice from my hometown magazine. I mean, Bringing Down the House, The True Story of Six MIT Kids Who Took Vegas for Millions has spent the past 52 weeks on the New York Times Bestseller list; it was one of the biggest local bestsellers in the city's history and it's being turned into a movie starring Kevin Spacey. It also happens to be set in Boston, has been read by just about everyone in Boston, and actually has MIT in the title! But no! Once again, no mention! Okay, I'm not asking for the cover—although Susan Orlean? Yeah, she's a great writer, but she writes for THE NEW YORKER. Sure, she keeps her shoes here, but she is the epitome of the New York Writer. Maybe I should have written about six New Yorker writers who were into gardening and rigged a flower contest. Maybe then someone at your magazine would give me a little love.

By the way, I do like the magazine. In fact, the first interview I ever did was with the IMPROPER, I think in 1997. That was eight books, 2 million copies sold, 11 languages, and one year-long bestseller ago. Hmmm. Maybe you just hate me.

Hurt, but still a fan,

—BEN MEZRICH

DOWNTOWN RESURRECTION

When nightlife nabob Frank De Pasquale closed the doors of Financial District hot spot Il Panino last August, he told fans of the five-floor restaurant/nightclub not to worry—a completely new concept for the space was on the way. Two months later he's made good on his word with Umbria, which he opened October 7.

Like its predecessor, Umbria is a five-floor, restaurant/nightclub serving Italian cuisine. The difference is in the details, most notably in chef Marisa Iocco's new menu. Rich, meat-heavy cuisine from central Italy's Umbria region is the name of the game (hence the name of the complex), and Iocco, also chef at Bricco in the North End, imports many of the ingredients from a 400-acre Umbrian farm. Gone is the emphasis on pizza and pasta. Instead, the menu features dishes like braised meats, truffles, chops, and rabbit and lamb ragouts. "There's a great trend going on in Boston with all the new steakhouses," says DePasquale. "This is an Italian version of that. Not a steakhouse, but very earthy cuisine."

Whereas the first two floors are geared toward feasting on Italian cuisine, the top three floors are nightlife oriented. For these, DePasquale looked to other hot spots for inspiration. The third-floor "ultralounge," replete with plush leather couches, padded walls, LED lighting and bottle service, is modeled after trendy clubs in New York, Vegas and the Sunset Strip. The fourth and fifth floors are one giant nightclub, with a vodka bar offering more than 110 different varieties as well as other libations, which you can sip as you head to the dance floor. 295 Franklin St., Boston (617-338-1000). —E.H. and Jessica Iredale

RIDING RICKSHAW

If you're tired of putting up with Boston taxicabs—their punctuality makes Alice in Wonderland's white rabbit look good and their prices dwarf those in New York City—you're in luck. The pedal-cab trend has made it's way to the Hub. Boston's Jennelle Moore introduced Beanie Cabs, the city's first fleet of the man-powered bicycles with an attached cab seating two passengers, the week of the Democratic National Convention. Moore currently has a crew of two pedicabs (with more on order) and 10 drivers who can do everything from take you to a wedding or company event to provide a tour of your favorite Boston neighborhood. And yes, they can give you a bar-hopping lift down Boylston Street during the Friday or Saturday night Lush Rush. That is, if you don't mind a front row view of someone's backside while you're pedaled around town. Prices vary, so call for details. (978-273-4758). www.beaniecabs.com.

ANDREW MCCARTHY

Starring roles in teen cult films such as St. Elmo's Fire, Pretty in Pink, Mannequin and, of course, Weekend at Bernie's, made Andrew McCarthy an '80s icon. Since the early '90s, the former Brat Packer's pulled a pop culture Houdini, leaving fans wondering what he's been up to. In the 20 years since his first wave of fame, the actor's racked up tons of television credits, taken to the stage, and, most recently, directed. McCarthy comes to town for the Boston Irish Film Festival on October 22 to screen his debut film News for the Church at the Harvard Film Archive. The short feature is based on Frank O'Connor's story about faith and hypocrisy in 1950's rural Ireland.

IB: What prompted you to direct?

AM: I read the story a long time ago, 15 years ago, and I bought the rights to it then and did nothing with it. But I thought I understood the story and knew how to make it. And about a year ago, I said, you know, I'm going to do this. It was just something I wanted to do. To take control and create something from nothing as opposed to waiting for the phone to ring.

IB: What's the most challenging part of being a new director?

AM: As an actor you always want to be thinking, What am I doing now? Where as a director you have to always be thinking, What am I doing next? You have to be thinking this, plus four steps ahead. I also suppose a challenge would be that people have preconceived notions of who they think I am as an actor, so they might bring that baggage to the film when they see it.

IB: You've been in plays and films and you've written and directed now. What's next? Are you writing a book?

AM: Actually, I just came back from Ireland. I was writing an article for a travel magazine, which was quite fun. So it's not a book, no, but it was fun.

IB: What do you think is your most underrated movie?

AM: That people would have seen? Heaven Help Us. I did that when I was a kid. It was a lovely little movie. One of the first I ever did. Certainly the best movie I did from that early period in my career.

IB: What about your most overrated movie?

AM: [Laughs] Impossible. There's no such thing. What do you mean? What movie people liked that I didn't quite get? I'm certainly amazed at the intensity of people's passion for Pretty in Pink. I think it's a lovely movie, but I'm just amazed that people have taken that so into their lives as they have. It never moved me the way it moved others.

IB: And for the requisite Brat Pack question: Do you keep in touch with anyone?

AM: I don't have as much nostalgia about my past as others might. But I live in New York, and most of those people probably live in Los Angeles. I see them around. Most of my friends aren't actors. Actually, somebody just called me. They wanted to do a 20th-anniversary reunion photo for Vanity Fair for St. Elmo's Fire. I thought that was a great idea. So I said, yeah, sure. Count me in.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

The Not-So-Terrible Twos... As a general rule, we don't condone celebrating a two-year-old's birthday with alcohol. But in the case of Azure, the restaurant in Boston's Lenox Hotel, we'll make an exception. In late September, the restaurant celebrated its second anniversary with the unveiling of a new white and blue stained-glass bar and a new lounge area. The bar, surrounded by a new 20-seat lounge area with leather chairs, will continue to serve chef/owner Robert Fatham's signature "Infusions Diabolique" and also offers a wide array of bar snacks ($2.50 apiece) like Spiced Cracker Jacks and Home Made Chips with Kick Ass Scotch Bonnet Sauce. 61 Exeter St., Boston (617-933-4800).

Double di Mio... When the owners of di Mio, a thin-crust pizza and sandwich shop in Porter Square, were ready to take their operation to the next level, they went to the neighborhood that's synonymous with Italian cuisine, the North End. On September 17, they opened a new di Mio at 261 North Street. Co-owner Daniel Adelson is more than optimistic that they'll avoid becoming just another fish in the North End's barrel. "No one here is really doing it like we are," he says. "We're going to capitalize on the lack of delivery in the North End. We make our own bread in house, and we're also a place where you can always come in for a slice of pizza." 261 North St., Boston (617-725-8880).

Bring on the Brownies... Russ and Sherry Berger, owners of Laurel Grill & Bar, Prairie Star and Firefly, have always been blown away by the popularity of their restaurants' brownie desserts. In September, the pair decided to cash in with the opening of the online B & B Brownie Factory. Working out of a secondary kitchen at Laurel's Berkeley Street location, B & B offers five brownie options, including the Quadruple Threat (double chocolate brownies covered in ganache and drizzled with white chocolate), that are available for overnight delivery in a high-gloss red gift box with six brownies per box. Prices range from $15.95–$22.95. www.bandbbrowniefactory.com.

Red Bull Meets Red Dog... Rhonda Kallman, co-founder of the Boston Beer Co. and the woman behind Edison Light, has a new brew hitting bars in Boston and Atlanta. Moonshot, whose label art is inspired by 1940s-style airplane nose cone adornments, differentiates itself from other beers by adding a shot of caffeine. Each can packs the punch of a half cup of coffee—the most caffeine you can legally put in a 12-ounce alcoholic beverage. Beer as club beverage, extra-strength hair of the dog, or morning-coffee substitute—the possibilities are endless. Go to www. moonshotbeer.com for more information.

WESTON HO

The history of J.M. Weston, a high-end Paris shoemaker that just opened a store on Newbury Street, goes back to the late 1800s, when the town of Weston, Mass., was a mecca for the art of fine shoemaking. The company founder's son honed his cobbling skills in the tony suburb, and he brought a new trick of the trade back to Paris: a handcrafted, sewn shoe (most manufacturers used glue at the time). The resulting shoe, longer-lasting and more refined, sparked a cult-like following after the first boutique opened in 1891. More than a century, and 27 worldwide boutiques, later, not much has changed in the family-operated shoemaker. Prices range from $500 to $3,000, and shoes are available custom made in seven different widths. 129 Newbury St., Boston (617-536-8822). —Samantha House

Know When to Fold 'Em... Catering to the poker craze, Mr. Dooley's is now holding Texas Hold 'Em Tuesdays, where patrons can face off against one another at poker from 8:30–9:30 pm. There's no buy-in (it's illegal to keep things legal), but the top player each night wins a prize. This is a relatively financially painless way to practice your poker face before you head to the casinos to take on the pros. Mr. Dooley's, 7 Broad St., Boston (617-338-5556).

Talkin' 'Bout My Renovation... People can't get enough of makeover shows—home, human and otherwise, and HGTV throws another one in the mix November 3 with the premiere of Generation Renovation. The show focuses on old homes that have been modernized, with several in the Boston area that showcase the rewards—and pitfalls—that await once you start gutting. One Cambridge couple lost their cat in the process of renovating what might be the smallest house in Cambridge, at 712 square feet. After spending two weeks trapped next to the motor of a refrigerator that had been pulled away from a wall, the hardy feline now has a custom litter box that's a miniature of the house itself. The show follows another Boston couple as they struggle to fit a 2,000-pound refrigerator in their kitchen, and we see the results of a Cape man's determination to bring a 100-pound cast-iron chandelier back from France as carryon luggage. And you thought the biggest reality-show lunatics were on Fear Factor.

Designer's Guild... If your design tastes are on the upscale mid-century to modern side, two new showrooms—one on each side of the Charles—are equipped to supply your interior needs. Design Within Reach opened its second New England showroom (the first opened a year ago in Cambridge) in mid August, adjacent to the swanky, new Atelier 505 building. The shop features pricey pieces by Le Corbusier, Eames, Prouve and Herman Miller, most of which are ready to ship within 24 hours. August also brought the first Massachusetts showroom for Bo Concept's custom line of minimalist modern furnishings, to Cambridge. *DWR, 519 Tremont St., Boston (617-451-7801), www.dwr.com. A MEAN 'WEEN

Great Halloween costumes and how to make them.

Halloween is rapidly approaching and you're probably wondering once again what to cobble together for a costume. Here are some suggestions for fun, original costumes and how to make them.

MEN

Amalgam of Famous People Man

Oftentimes, costumes are misunderstood. One year I was a golfer getting struck by lightning and, because of the charcoal smeared on my face, roughly half the populace of Boston thought I was in blackface trying to look like Tiger Woods. Whoops! That's why you've got to be careful with your costume to make sure people don't get the wrong message. With this costume, you'll integrate signature looks from a variety of beloved icons and let other revelers guess which part belongs to whom. First, you'll want to grow a small mustache below your nose, a look made famous by Charlie Chaplin. Then put on a long, scraggly white beard and a turban, hallmarks, respectively, of two beloved fictional characters—Gandalf from Lord of the Rings and Aladdin. Finally, walk around with a jug of purple Kool-Aid and urge people to drink it, just like the Kool-Aid man! Since so many Halloween costumes have dark, negative connotations, I think this one is refreshingly cheerful and I encourage someone to try it and let me know how it goes.

WOMEN

Variation on the Female-as-Feline Theme

Let's face it, women dressing as cats is played out. Besides your stereotypical CVS ready-to-wear cat costume, you've got Catwoman, Puss-in-Boots, Eartha Kitt…the list goes on. This is why I want to see a hot chick dressed up as a Saint Bernard. A big, sexy dog running around spastically and slobbering all over everyone would make a party, in my opinion. Making this costume requires a good deal of advance planning, however, because the pelt-curing process takes three to five days.

TEAM COSTUMES

SpaceShipOne and White Knight

Burt Rutan's groundbreaking new passenger space vehicle would make for a killer team costume. One person could be White Knight, the big jet used to reach launch altitude, and one person could be the smaller, space vehicle. The SpaceShipOne person would be attached to the other's back (possibly with Velcro) but would periodically peel off and zoom away with a "Rrrrwwhoooshhh!" sound. If you and your girlfriend do this costume, you should probably let her be SpaceShipOne. I have no idea how to make this costume. Like space travel itself, it's a difficult challenge.

AN EXTREME MAKEOVER

This costume is great if you're particularly good-looking but have an ugly friend—and in every good-looking clique, there's at least one unsightly reality-check of an individual. Your unattractive friend should wear baggy gray underpants emblazoned with the word "Before" and refrain from showering for the week preceding Halloween. You should wear a gown and a beauty-pageant sash that reads "After," and pause in front of every mirror to squeal and weep. If you can't find a friend willing to participate in this costume, call Louie Anderson. He should be available.

YOUR UNATTRACTIVE FRIEND SHOULD WEAR BAGGY GRAY UNDERPANTS EMBLAZONED WITH THE WORD "BEFORE"

A POP-UP AD

My favorite Internet pop-ups are ones that feature a picture of Cameron Diaz, Oprah and Flipper and a challenge to "Click on the celebrity who lives in the ocean and win a prize!" If you haven't planned a costume and it's mere hours before the throwdown, here's how to execute the pop-up ad: Just wear your normal clothes, get really drunk, and when someone asks you a question, crouch on the floor and then jump up suddenly and yell, "Find your high-school classmates online! Seized drug-dealer vehicles for $100! Cheap diplomas! Woo woo woo!"

If you find this idea stupid, then wear a cow mask and an all-black bodysuit and say you're in the Moo Man Group. Shave all your body hair, get naked, cover yourself in oil and go as a newborn. Dress in a lumpy pink sweatsuit and be Bartolo Colon. Personally, I'm going as a nihilist and I really don't care what you do. IB

THE COLLINS CARD

BY CHRIS COLLINS

SILENCE OF THE FANS

With other teams vying for our attention, the sad state of the Bruins has been forgotten.

Amid all the hoopla related to the Red Sox' postseason and the Patriots' run at history, there's been a deafening silence on Causeway Street.

There was a day when the big, bad Bruins were part-owners of the city of Boston. Newbury Street was Bruins great Derek Sanderson's party zone. When he wasn't feeding Bobby Orr on the ice, he was feeding his thirst for a good party. The booze was, of course, on the house.

Talk about the toast of the town. From the early 1970s all the way through the late '80s, the Bruins were, to put it bluntly, exciting and awesome. Now the fabric of Boston sports has a huge hole in it. And the more I look at that gaping space, the harder it gets to remember what used to exist. What's even more amazing is that nobody seems to care.

Professional hockey is gone, with the owners and the players engaged in a work stoppage. And its return isn't exactly in the forecast. It's the same old boring story about the money grab. The problem, though, is the lingering effect: Will the NHL recover?

Hockey is such a regional game it seems silly to try to force it down the throats of sun-belt communities in Florida and Arizona. Isn't that like putting a beach volleyball franchise in the North Pole? But hockey has been a northeast passion for years. Growing up in Massachusetts I was never much of a guy to lace up the skates, but just about every other kid on the block was down at Devil's Ditch skating on the pond.

Now pro hockey is on life support. It's easy to see how it doesn't generate big bucks in places like Nashville and Columbus, but Boston Bruins president Harry Sinden has been crying poor-mouth for years and that's really an insulting joke. The B's are one of the more profitable franchises in hockey and always have been.

Bruins fans deserve better. While Sinden and owner Jeremy Jacobs may have been a little ahead of their time in understanding the way the other owners were draining their revenues in a money pit, they forgot about the little guy from Revere and East Boston along the way. While there are a lot of losers in this situation, probably none will suffer more than the local businesses surrounding the FleetCenter. The mom-and-pop businesses will end up paying the ultimate price when rational thinking can't end a potentially disastrous situation.

Hard as it might be to believe, New England's pro soccer franchise, the Revolution, may have a legitimate shot at becoming the fourth member of the Big Four. The Sox, Patriots, Celtics and the Revs? No longer will I buff my car with that red, white and blue Taylor Twellman jersey. I'll grab my Joe Thornton sweater to wipe away my car's grime.

The worst part for the Bruins is the outrage: There isn't any. Nobody cares. Nobody is complaining. Nobody is wondering when, if ever, the next puck will be dropped.

Ask yourself this: What are we going to do without hockey? Well, I already have it all planned out. First, the Red Sox make their run, which takes us through October. Then the Patriots and poster-boy quarterback Tom Brady take hold of the region while chasing history and a third Super Bowl title in four years, bringing us through to early February. Then you factor in the Celtics, who will serve as an occasional diversion while most of New England's sports passion is directed toward Foxboro.

> THE WORST PART FOR THE BRUINS IS THE OUTRAGE THERE ISN'T ANY NOBODY CARES NOBODY IS COMPLAINING

Then guess what happens in mid February? The equipment truck leaves Yawkey Way for Fort Myers, and pitchers start popping baseballs in catchers' mitts.

Oh yes, I forgot about hot-stove talk. Do the Red Sox re-sign Pedro Martinez? What about Jason Varitek? Is Brad Radke coming to Boston? And so on.

So even though it's been gone for a relatively short time, pro hockey and our Boston Bruins have already been forgotten. Maybe, just maybe, the owners and players could sign an agreement and save at least a 41-game season. But even if they do, it might be too late.

Which leads me to a question: If the Bruins play and nobody cares, is there really hockey in this town? IB

the DINING issue

If summer's the season to eat light, winter's the time to tuck in. So we've devoted this issue to chase-away-the-cold choices like hearty pastas, robust wines and rich cheeses and chocolates. Read on to find out about local restaurants that are getting creative with the fun-food classic, fondue; meet the expert sommeliers who manage some of Boston's best wine lists; and explore hidden Italian gems in the North End. We kick off with Jonathan Soroff's interview with applied mathematician–turned–dessert diva Joanne Chang, owner of Flour Bakery + Café.

JOANNE CHANG

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Baker and pastry chef Joanne Chang, owner of Flour Bakery + Café in the South End, was born in Houston and lived in Tulsa and Denver before her family settled permanently in Dallas. She came to Boston to attend Harvard, where she earned a degree, with honors, in applied mathematics and economics. After a short stint as a management consultant, she decided to become a professional cook and started as a garde-manger at Biba. She worked for a year as an assistant to the head baker at Bentonwood Bakery in Newton and in 1995 was hired as pastry chef at Rialto in Cambridge. She moved to New York in 1997 to oversee the cake department of Payard Patisserie and Bistro and returned to Boston a year later to serve as pastry chef at Mistral. In 2000, she realized her dream when she opened Flour, a bakery and café serving pastries, breads, cakes, cookies, tarts, sandwiches, soups, pizzas and salads. Located in the South End, Flour has been featured in Gourmet, Food & Wine, The New York Times, Condé Nast Traveler, and Lucky. Chang has written numerous articles and cookbook reviews and is currently working on a cookbook featuring the most popular items at Flour. She also teaches classes and advises pastry chefs in both the restaurant business and cooking schools. She lives in Boston with fellow foodie Christopher Myers, co-owner of Radius, Via Matta and Great Bay.

Jonathan Soroff: So what hours do bakers keep?

Joanne Chang: It depends. The opening baker comes in around 4:30 am. We open at 7 and it takes about two-and-a-half hours to get everything into the oven and out onto the counter.

JS: Favorite dessert?

JC: Ice cream. It's my favorite all-time everything.

JS: Least favorite?

JC: In general, when I'm at a restaurant, the one thing I tend not to order is chocolate. It's not that I don't like it. I love it. But I feel that it's such an easy flavor for a pastry chef, and it's simple to do a mediocre chocolate dessert that people will still be happy with. I'd rather focus on something fruity or creamy.

JS: How much weight have you gained since opening Flour?

JC: [Laughs.] I haven't.

JS: You do realize everyone's going to hate you for that.

JC: It's funny. This is a physically demanding job. You're loading 50-pound bags of flour and sugar, trays of scones that weigh more than that. You're going back and forth from the walk-in to the counter to the mixer. You've got a 60-quart mixing bowl that takes two people to lift onto the counter. It's a workout every day. The other thing is that when you're surrounded by pastries all day long, you don't want them anymore.

JS: Can you get rich being a baker?

JC: Hmm. I think it would be hard. You're selling $1.95 muffins and $1.50 scones and $3.00 tarts…

JS: Who are you calling a three-dollar tart?!?

JC: [Laughs.] I'm sure that whoever owns Au Bon Pain is very rich, but I don't think that person's a baker anymore.

JS: So was Harvard a waste of time?

JC: Absolutely not.

JS: You studied economics and applied mathematics. What one thing that you learned there is most useful in your career?

JC: I'd say my comfort with numbers. If we have a recipe we need to do two-thirds of because the pan size is 7 instead of 9 inches, it doesn't phase me. I doubt that's hard for most people…

JS: So what's the most obnoxious thing an uppity Harvard alum has said about your career choice?

JC: Three or four years ago, at a reunion, somebody said, "You must be so glad you don't have a real job." I understood what they meant. The intention wasn't bad. But I've been here since six this morning and this is the first time I've sat down all day. And this isn't even an all-out busy day. So I think this is a real job.

JS: What's in your refrigerator at home—butter, eggs and sugar?

JC: Well, yes, but also, for me there's fruit, miso paste, Chinese vegetables, yogurt, milk, a pastry or two from the bakery. Then, because Christopher's doing the low-carb thing, there's bacon, ham, eggs, butter, cottage cheese, tomatoes, pickles. We don't cook a lot at home. We do a lot of take-out.

JS: Your best seduction recipe? You can get a man to do anything if you make him _____.

I DON'T UNDERSTAND CHEESE PLATES. THEY BRING ME CHEESE WHEN IT'S DESSERT TIME? WHAT IS THAT? IF IT'S SAVORY VERSUS SWEET, I'LL ALWAYS GO FOR THE SWEET

JC: Well, Christopher loves my Chinese barbequed ribs.

JS: Very romantic. One thing you hate to cook?

JC: A flavor I hate working with is hazelnuts. I can't stand the way they taste and I have to force myself to put them into desserts because I know that a lot of people like hazelnuts. I also can't eat peanut butter. We make a peanut butter cookie and I have to have one of the bakers try it because it always tastes bad to me.

JS: Ever feel guilty about contributing to the obesity of America?

JC: Honestly, no. It's all about moderation.

JS: How about the no-carb/low-carb thing?

JC: It's my favorite subject. It drives me insane. I think any time you restrict your diet you're bound to lose weight. It's not that carbs are evil and cutting them out is some magic bullet. I don't want to sound snobby or unsympathetic. I was once quoted as saying something like, "If you don't want to eat pastries then don't come in here," which is awful. I know that many people struggle with their weight and I understand that. But I struggle when they want me to make a low carb bread or a low carb dessert—something that fits into their diet but tastes awful and is nothing like what we're trying to do here. I'd like to be responsive to those requests, but I just don't think anyone would like anything I could make out of Splenda and cornstarch, or whatever the acceptable wheat flour substitute is that I'm supposed to use. I don't want to sound like a pastry prima donna, but that's my honest opinion on the subject.

JS: As a child, did you have an Easy-Bake Oven?

JC: I think so.

JS: Could you still cook something delicious using a lightbulb?

JC: I think I probably could.

JS: Cake mixes: pro or con?

JC: Pro. We don't use them, of course, but they're great for someone cooking at home. Four years ago, when we were developing our devil's food cake recipe, I said, "I want Duncan Hines. Really moist, really chocolaty." That's what we were aiming for.

JS: Is it true that the Pillsbury DoughBoy gives everyone a yeast infection?

JC: [Laughs.] I think you're definitely onto something there.

JS: You've run every Boston Marathon for 14 years? Do you carbo-load the night before?

JC: Oh, yeah. Pasta and bread.

JS: Would you rather date a butcher or a candlestick maker?

JC: A butcher. Anybody who works with food. Don't they say that food and sex are next to each other in your brain? If you're passionate about one, you're probably passionate about the other.

JS: Is fried dough its own food group?

JC: [Laughs.] A lot of people would probably say yes. Same thing with doughnuts. I think we could close this place down and sell nothing but doughnuts and make as much money.

JS: Twinkies or Devil Dogs?

JC: Neither. I never really ate that stuff. I didn't grow up with junk food. We were Chinese. So I'm sure I had one once, but I don't really remember.

JS: Any food quirks?

JC: Besides loving leftover Chinese food? It's so much better the next day. I also like to eat the chocolate out of the chocolate chip cookies, the apples out of apple cake, the raisins out of oatmeal raisin cookies. Which I guess is weird.

JS: Which would you rather have: a good cheese or an Oreo?

JC: Oh, my gosh, an Oreo. I hate cheese. I don't understand cheese plates. They bring me cheese when it's dessert time? What is that? If it's savory versus sweet, I'll always go for the sweet. That's how I knew to go into sweets. I was working as a line cook at Biba, and I didn't want to eat anything. You're supposed to taste everything, and I was like, "Uchhh."

JS: Does having a sweet tooth mean you have a sweet disposition?

JC: I think so. I always look really suspiciously at people who say they don't like dessert. iB

iTALIAN HIDEAWAYS

IT'S NO SECRET THAT THE NORTH END IS A DINING MECCA, BUT LITTLE-KNOWN GEMS ABOUND IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD.

BY RUTH TOBIAS
PHOTOGRAPHS BY OLIVIA GATTI

Ah, the hidden gem. It's the X on every gastronome's treasure map—that intimate little hideaway where meals are made to remember for the lucky few who've made the discovery. Where said map depicts the North End, however, nary an X appears. That's because the culinary resources of Beantown's own Little Italy have been thoroughly mined—not depleted, mind you, but fully surveyed. And not only are the North End's flashy finds in high demand, but they fetch a fortune to boot—even the deeply flawed ones, of which there are plenty (not to mention the few downright impostors).

In lieu of any truly hidden jewel, even the haughtiest connoisseur can appreciate the next best thing: Let's [illegible] inconspicuous pearl. Such a place hardly shrouds itself in mystery, but neither does it trigger much hype. [illegible] though it may not be as coldly dazzling at first glance as a precious stone, it steadily radiates its own softer [illegible] glow. The analogy goes not only for restaurants but bars and markets too. Here, then, are a few choice [illegible] haunts.

There are several reasons our neighborhood faves tend to hover just under the radar. One of the simplest is that they simply aren't much to look at. Since a majority of folks come not merely to eat but to have themselves a quintessential North End experience, it's understandable that they gravitate toward trattorias with grapevine-strewn rafters and wicker-wrapped Chianti rather than, say, a seemingly run-of-the-mill pizzeria like Ernesto's: With neither the old-school charisma of more historic parlors nor the panache of their gourmet counterparts, this plain little joint on Salem Street barely warrants a glance from passersby on their mission for someone's mama's manicotti.

And yet, on closer inspection, they'd likely see Ernesto's regulars—young and old, and generally boisterous—congregating around the sidewalk tables, chomping on enormous slices. A closer look would reveal that each of these slices is actually two. (To ask why they don't just cut larger single slices is to risk a Spinal Tap–esque response about going to 11, or, in this case, two. So just relish the freebie.) Inside the shop are a handful of tables and a shelved counter lined, at any given time, with a dozen or so pies; the menu lists more than 30 varieties, of which nearly 20 are specialty combos. And one bite explains Ernesto's local legitimacy. Though both thin and thick crusts have their merits and drawbacks (tirelessly debated by their champions and detractors), this intermediate crust is positively Goldilocks-ian, nicely chewy but not doughy, and olive oil–tinged to boot. (Sicilian-style slices are thicker, of course, and on the whole less distinguished; they go for $3–$3.50, while regular slices are $2.75–$4.50.) As for toppings, truly quality ingredients in proper proportion make all the difference. From the more traditional, ultra-rich pairing of prosciutto and mascarpone to the funky blend of chunky bacon, juicy (read: not precooked) chicken, and diced tomatoes, plus a schmear of ranch dressing—they strike a neat balance between salty and sweet, unctuous and fresh. So while we wouldn't suggest you bring your in-laws here for their silver anniversary, we'd heartily applaud a weekly off-hour spree, ambience-free but flavor-filled. 69 Salem St., Boston (617-523-1373).

Much the same can be said for Galleria Umberto—unless your in-laws are Sicilian, in which case they could be so grateful for a glimmer of authenticity that they'll overlook the drab digs. Though it's smack in the tourist crosshairs—on Hanover Street, between Cross and Prince—it's virtually unknown to most visitors, with good reason: It's an old-fashioned linoleum-and-chrome luncheonette that stays open only until the kitchen runs out of food. And you can bet area residents and workers would just as soon keep it a secret, since as it is, the noontime lines span the long, narrow, bare room, and it's pretty much a case of Murphy's Law—or maybe la legge di Umberto: By the time you reach the front, they'll be out of the very thing you were craving most. Never fear, however, because everything from this rosticceria satisfies. While the calzones ($3–$3.50) and the simple pan pizza ($1 per slice), with its snappy, fresh-tasting sauce, are the most palpable people-pleasers, more distinctive delights are the croquette-like arancini and panzarotti. Arancini ($2) are enormous, pea-studded balls of perfectly cooked rice with a molten center of beef ragù and mozzarella; both in texture and flavor, they hold together impressively within their thin, crisp, deep-fried crusts. Ditto the panzarotti ($1), though they're filled instead with herbed mashed potatoes and a plug of mozzarella. Umberto's panini ($1.50), meanwhile, aren't your average grill-pressed ham-and-cheese sammys; rather, they're lovely golden buns, delicately crunchy outside, soft inside, completely encasing fillings like prosciutto and mozzarella, which pack a sassy, salty punch. And as for those prices—

Another, less excusable reason for the relative obscurity of some worthwhile North End spots is that they lack either a Hanover Street or Salem Street address. It's as though both Fodor and Frommer gave express instructions to turn neither right nor left. That's just as well in the case of Fresh Cheese, since the tiny store on Endicott barely accommodates one customer, let alone three or four. From floor to ceiling, corner to corner, it's filled with oils and olives and pastas, cheese wheels and sausages and hams—and staffed by seeming gentle giants, husky young men proffering free samples at every turn. Naturally, a majority of the products are imports; so if you've never tried Italian tuna (it's usually jarred in oil, rarely tinned in water) or vincotto (a condiment similar to balsamic vinegar, but sweeter) or preserved eggplant, this is your place. If you've never plucked a pepperoni straight down from the rafters, or picked a provolone or pecorino from among seven or eight different varieties, or tasted a salt-packed anchovy, this is your place. Moreover, what isn't imported is often house-made, including the fresh ricotta and various stuffed peppers. The shop also makes subs whose heft indeed seems seaworthy—one-footers laden with mortadella, salami and Swiss cheese, plus chopped tomatoes, lettuce, pickles and peppers. Between the freebies and the hoagies, you'll leave Fresh Cheese purged indeed, namely of the need to eat for a week. 81 Endicott St., Boston (617-570-0007).

If not, however, you could pop on over to North Street for a bite at the ever-pleasant surprise that is Limoncello. Go for lunch on a Sunday afternoon and you might end up witnessing a wedding ceremony, conducted right there in the dining room as you eat; arrive for dinner on a weeknight, and you may find yourself surrounded by couples speaking anything and everything but English. In short, a strange kind of magic suffuses this trattoria—after all, its backstory, involving a hard-working waiter with a winning lottery ticket, is better-known than the place itself. Despite a few kitschy touches, like the mural of a sweeping landscape, Limoncello is a pretty place, all warm hues and white linens, with double magnums lining a central partition. And except for a few snoozers offered to placate the tame of tastebud, the menu is a compendium of charmers, appealingly conceived and for the most part well executed. This is especially true of the snazzy appetizers (which wear disproportionately high price tags to match). The choicest include braised baby octopus with chickpeas in tomato sauce ($13)—a trinity of textural contrasts unified by lightness in flavor—and the stuffed artichoke ($16), whose supremely rich filling, pungent with pecorino and salami, acts almost like a dip for the tender chips of the leaves. Pastas are another success story, particularly the tagliolini al limoncello ($19)—in which the perfectly done homemade noodles stand up to the intensely creamy sauce, punctuated by a few sweet jumbo shrimp (and an unnecessary garnish of arugula). Fusilli con ragù all'Abruzzese ($18) also rings true, its sauce's chunks of lamb rightly doing most of the heavy lifting flavorwise. Among the meat dishes, veal takes priority. A recent special showed why: The roast veal shank ($36) was done to a turn, bathed in a velvety mushroom sauce, mercifully marsala-free. 190 North St., Boston (617-523-4480).

Not that marsala is an automatic stop signal. Indeed, right across North Street, at Ricardo's, you'll find plenty of green-light dishes on one of the more honest red-sauce menus around. Typically, Italian-American fare suffers from ham-handedness: too much coating on the outside, too much sugar on the inside, too much cheese on top. And the result is often a soggy mess. Here, however, they keep a light touch, although the piped-in mangia-mangia music and hilarious portrait of la nonna circa 1966 might initially lead you to suspect otherwise. Eggplant rollatini ($6.95), for instance, are thin slices of eggplant, properly—i.e., gently—breaded and fried, stuffed with plain ricotta and plated with the sort of fresh tomato sauce that gives marinara a good name. Similarly, pollo exquisito ($14.95), though battered, isn't broken; the chicken, with its salty overlay of prosciutto and mozzarella, remains juicy, and the marsala-laced pan juices, though rather sweet, don't cloy. Even the stuffed calamari over linguini ($15.95) fares well, the shellfish properly tender, the linguini properly toothsome (only the breadcrumb stuffing borders on flavorless). Clearly, unlike at some of the tourist haunts, there's someone in the kitchen who's more than just a can opener. 175 North St., Boston (617-720-3994).

The last stop on our tour is an underground fave in every sense of the adjective. Located below Caffé Vittoria, Stanza dei Sigari is the ultimate den of iniquity; it not only boasts historical cred as a Prohibition-era speakeasy, but also, ironically enough, enjoys its current standing as one of the only bars left in town that can legally sell both smokes and spirits. Indeed, its menu comprises several pages, listing numerous cigars ($10–$35) from the cellar vault and a wide range of liquors to supplement the stogies—scotch and bourbon, cognac and port, grappa and tequila, to name a few, plus a smattering of martinis. What's more, you can enjoy it all in style. Not high style, exactly, but style nonetheless, as Stanza dei Sigari eschews country club luxury for a more wink-wink take on comfort. It's filled with smoking memorabilia to be perused at leisure, from souvenir ashtrays to risqué posters to intricately carved pipes. Of course, the recent introduction of oh-so-hip huqqa service ($20 per hour) may mean the end of Stanza's hideaway days, so use it, or lose it to the trendy set. 292 Hanover St., Boston (617-227-0295). IB

GURUS OF THE GRAPE

From seasoned veterans to adventurous newcomers, Boston's sommeliers craft their wine lists with a dash of personality.

BY JUDITH GAINES

ILLUSTRATIONS BY PHILIP KERRIGAN

It's Wine Monday at L'Espalier, Frank McClelland's nouveau French–New England restaurant in Boston's Back Bay. On this evening, about 30 people have come for the special $50 dinner that's one of the city's best deals: four or five courses, each paired with a half glass of a wine specially selected to complement the dish. As he does at all these events, sommelier Erik Johnson is talking to the group. Or perhaps I should say he is effusing. When he talks about wine and winemakers, he bubbles, like the Champagne he loves. If he could levitate to express his pleasure with his wines and his job, he would.

Tonight the theme is California cabernets, and we start with a light cab, the 2000 Quintana from Laurel Glen, on California's North Coast. It's not a big or complex wine but it's fruity and fun, charmingly paired with smoky potato pancakes with tomatoes, chives, frog legs and a little caviar. The winemaker, Patrick Campbell, is a polio sufferer who gets around on crutches "but that doesn't slow him down at all," says Johnson, who loves telling the stories behind the wines.

Next comes a pot-au-feu of monkfish and monkfish liver, which Johnson calls "the foie gras of the sea." It's paired with a 2000 Michel Schlumberger, a subtle, elegant cabernet made by a Frenchman who lives in California's Dry Creek Valley. Johnson loves this wine and asked McClelland to prepare the monkfish medley to accompany it. Fish and red wine combos are hot this year, and the acid in the cab cuts the richness of the liver with just the right sort of spicy finesse. At my table, everyone is enchanted.

Johnson, who also works at Sel de la Terre, is one of the best in a city blessed with many terrific sommeliers (which is the fancy name for a wine steward or director of wines). The sommelier picks the restaurant's wines—buys them, organizes how they're stored and sold and teaches the staff about them. Some arrange special wine tastings, wine dinners or other wine-related events. All maintain their wine lists and work the floors at night, explaining their selections to restaurant patrons and suggesting how to match beverage and food while staying within the customer's budget.

With thousands of wines in the world—there are more than 1,000 grape varieties in Italy alone—nobody can know them all. Sommeliers are our guides. If the worst of them can ruin a meal by being impatient or snooty, the best share their passion without dictating cost or taste. They can make a great meal more memorable and, occasionally, even magical.

Unlike Johnson, who was raised in Wisconsin in a nondrinking family, Ted Davidson, sommelier at Aujourd'hui in the Four Seasons hotel, grew up around grapes. He was raised in Sonoma County, California, in a family that had its own vineyard and sold grapes to local wineries. Wine is in his blood. But he graduated from the San Francisco Conservatory of Music and sang opera as a tenor for five years before opting to pursue his interest in wine professionally. He's been a sommelier for 15 years, working at Mantra in Boston as well as restaurants in New York City and San Francisco before coming to the Four Seasons five months ago.

Before Davidson arrived, the hotel's restaurants didn't have a sommelier, and its wine list favored predictable suppliers who bottled at least a half million cases a year. Now, the newly renovated dining room at Aujourd'hui showcases 12 wine cabinets with individual temperature controls, a change in decor that signals a new interest in all sorts of wines, including those from small, boutique producers, Davidson says.

You might expect an opera singer working at the Four Seasons to have a big ego, but what's most striking about Davidson are his thoughtfulness and humility. As both singer and sommelier, he says, he's aware that the lifestyle of his patrons is more monied than his own. He's there to serve, and his wine choices are remarkable for their care and precision. When he matches a Trimbach 2001 Gewürztraminer to an appetizer of bruleed figs with gorgonzola and mâche at the Bristol Lounge, the result is a revelation: The fragrant, full-bodied Alsatian wine first complements the figs with the taste of lychee nuts and then finishes with a dry, spicy kick that offsets the sweetness of the fruit—a perfectly balanced combination.

To make his selections, Davidson often tastes 50 to 100 wines a week. What makes a great sommelier, he says, "is a great memory." He thinks Spanish wines from some lesser-known regions will be popular soon, as well as wines from Portugal, where the technology of winemaking is improving rapidly. He's also keen on Champagne. For the holiday season this year (after Thanksgiving), Aujourd'hui will offer 20 Champagnes by the glass and a degustation menu featuring Champagnes paired with every course.

Catherine Silirie, wine director at No. 9 Park Street, B&G Oysters and the Butcher Shop, offers the most eclectic wine menu in town. Where Davidson is cautious and correct, Silirie is willing to take a few more risks. Even at the Butcher Shop, a wine bar/eatery/retail butcher shop with a casual atmosphere, you won't find anything that might be considered a generic American wine. But you will find, for instance, a 2002 Côtes du Saint Mont Les Vignes Retrouvees, which is like a sauvignon blanc, and a 2001 Mazane Marzemino Costaripa, which resembles a merlot. Silirie favors wines that are more nuanced than powerful, and she travels extensively, especially in Europe, to find varieties that most Bostonians have never tasted, or even heard of.

This kind of wine list can be intriguing and wonderfully surprising, but it can also be intimidating to customers, since most of the wines are unfamiliar to them. To educate staff about her list, Silirie spends about an hour every day giving tastings and quizzing them about what they've sampled, training them to be helpful.

Silirie dresses in a funky, artsy style that I'd call Elegant Gypsy. On the day I interview her, she's wearing flounces and frills, and soft, winey pinks and purples. She says she was the first female sommelier in Boston when she was hired in 1989 by Grille 23, and in 1991, she moved on to Rocco's, a Theater District restaurant that's no longer in business, in 1991. Around this time, Barbara Lynch, the chef-owner of the three restaurants where Silirie now works, was a line cook at Olives. Silirie urged Rocco execs to hire her, and the two have been working together ever since.

You can't be a good sommelier at a bad restaurant, Silirie believes—the food-wine matchup is central to a great dining experience. She's especially proud of her relationship with Lynch. The two discuss menu items frequently and tinker with dishes to stay in sync as they explore new combinations of textures and tastes. Among their recent exotic collaborations was a meal for a fund-raiser at which all the dishes contained seafood and all the wines were reds.

Asked about sommeliers she admires, Silirie points to Jeannie Rogers of Il Capriccio, a Northern Italian restaurant in Waltham. Rogers' wine choices are so distinctive that she's really in a league all her own. Most sommeliers buy their wines from wholesalers who visit periodically, hawking samples of their wares. As Al Stankus, the well-respected sommelier at Davio's, puts it, "The mountain comes to Mohammed." Rogers goes another route.

Wine, she says, should provide "a total experience that's transporting." To make her selections, she wants to know what the winery looks and feels like. She wants to explore the history and geography of the community on the ground, meet the winemakers and their families, see how they grow grapes and make wine. And she prefers focused, handcrafted wines made as naturally as possible, with a depth of flavor and a sense that they have something interesting to say.

So three or four times a year since about 1989, Rogers has traveled to Northern Italy, getting to know the region's vintners. She favors small farmers who produce just a few thousand bottles a year—not the sort who typically sell outside their local areas. Serving their wines at Il Capriccio means helping the winemakers navigate international bureaucracies, explaining regulations that may be confusing to those who don't speak English well, finding an American distributor they can supply and from whom she can buy. It's a time-consuming process, but the results are remarkable, and well worth a trip to Waltham to experience them.

Catherine Silirie favors wines that are more nuanced than powerful, and she travels extensively to find varieties most Bostonians have never tasted.

To some Bostonians the dean of sommeliers is Al Stankus. A former social studies teacher, he's been writing and lecturing about food and wine since 1984

Rogers isn't much interested in wines that are hot, but she does say she expects the 2003 vintage of many Italian reds to be popular. After a sunny, dry year, the grapes were unusually ripe and juicy, she says, which will make for rounder, less acidic and more approachable wines than normal. Meanwhile, she offers an array of intriguing options, including a golden 2001 Sassaia, by Angiolino Maule, with a complex tangerine and mineral flavor unlike anything I've ever tasted, and an earthy, amber 2001 Damijan Ribolla Gialla that could pass for either a red or a white in a dark glass.

To some Bostonians, the dean of sommeliers is Al Stankus. Born in Chelsea and a former high school social studies teacher, Stankus has been writing and lecturing about food and wine since 1984; he co-edited the Zagat guide to Boston restaurants for seven years, worked at Martignetti's wine store for about a dozen years, and has been sommelier at Davio's since 2002. He never took a wine course, but like many sommeliers, educated himself by reading and tasting as much as he could and learning on the job.

Of all the stars in this article, Stankus has the most conservative wine list. He doesn't like many California wines—they're "too sunny and bright" and have too much alcohol, he says. And he disapprovingly notes the growing interest in Australian wines. "Why do I need them?" he asks. "They're too over-the-top." Stankus has many followers who appreciate his steady, reliable judgment—particularly for European wines like the Tuscans, including Chianti—and his friendly, unpretentious manner. He could be your Uncle Al.

If Boston has a Young Turk sommelier, someone with wild ideas and an amusingly zany approach, that would be Geoffrey Fallon, 33, of Les Zygomates. A former bartender who liked martinis and beer, he wasn't interested in wine and didn't drink it much at all until he took the job at Les Zyg five years ago. But he had a good palate, a willingness to learn about wine and a lively, articulate way of describing what he liked. Now he offers weekly Tuesday night wine tastings—four or five wines accompanied by appetizers for $25. His style is about equal parts schoolmarm and stand-up comic.

For those on a tight budget, Fallon has an eclectic list of bottles priced at less than $20, as well as an "id list" of $20 to $60 wines he describes as "hidden treasures, personal favorites, leftovers from wine tastings, bin ends and downright funky wines," by which he means, "something that doesn't taste like anything a normal person would expect to find in a wine, such as the flavor of mushrooms."

He'd like Les Zygomates to be the first restaurant in Boston to offer a $60 wine with a screw top—it's the future, he says. He thinks there's growing interest in "eclectic pairings," such as matching red wines "with anything you can put grill marks on, like mackerel or even sardines." And he's looking forward to a "Champagne shoot-out" on November 16, featuring six glasses of bubbly plus food in a blind tasting for $40. Wine tastings should be celebratory and fun, Fallon says, and the Champagne shoot-out "is the most festive event of them all." IB

TOUR DE fondue

BY ERIN HAGEDORN

CHEFS GET CREATIVE WITH THE ULTIMATE FALL INDULGENCE.

It's no secret that after decades on the back burner, fondue has made a comeback. The classic conversational centerpiece that doubles as a meal now appears on the menus of restaurants from the hip to the traditional—and those nifty space-age pots have been popping up at home-goods stores across the nation. In Boston, fondue's return has taken nearly every form imaginable. Instead of sticking with the traditional cheese variety, which originated in Switzerland, chefs are getting creative. "It's a basic dish that evolved into many variations, many of which have nothing to do with the original," explains Avenue One chef Brad Ozerdem. "To make our menus more interesting and to keep up with trends, we tend to add to the repertoire." It's clear that nothing is off-limits as chefs have embraced a "fundue" philosophy that's taking the delectable dish in exciting new directions. Dip in and see.

THE WINE CELLAR

30 Mass. Ave., Boston, 617-236-0080

Specializing in fondue and wine, the Wine Cellar is one of the most romantic new spots in town, and the atmosphere makes sharing such an intimate dish even more sensual. Tucked away from the hustle and bustle of Mass. Ave., the cozy, subterranean restaurant feels like a European bistro—it's small, casual and dimly lit, and diners are encouraged to linger over their meals.

Despite having a wider selection of fondues than Imelda Marcos had shoes, the raison d'etre of the Wine Cellar is, in fact, the wine. Its encyclopedic wine list includes an index of vintages, and an incredible 630 varieties are available, at prices ranging from $25 to $500 a bottle. Scores are served by the glass. So why the fondue? Owner Alex Gozman, a Russian immigrant and an avid wine collector, puts it simply: "The best food to accompany wine is cheese."

The Wine Cellar's 20-plus fondue options come in three categories: oil-based, cheese and chocolate. Exuberant general manager Thierry Charles says his favorite is the Back Bay (a decadent $54 cheese fondue, with crab meat, lobster and shallots). We opted to start with the Traditional Gorgonzola fondue ($42), which is plenty for two. Into the savory sauce—a blend of gorgonzola, Gruyère, Emmental and Appenzeller cheeses, flavored with pancetta, kirsch, white wine and roasted garlic—you dunk chunks of bread, potato pieces, and asparagus spears wrapped in prosciutto.

Although the cheese is fun, it's even more fun to cook your own sausage, chicken and beef in a vat of boiling oil called the Chef's Fondue ($23). This one is served with three sauces—Champagne vinaigrette, barbecue and a béarnaise—that you can mix and match. Timing your skewers on the six forks makes for an interactive dinner, and a conversation sparker.

Conversation is part of what makes fondue so popular, Charles tells us. "When you order a meal with friends, as soon as your dinner comes you eat it in order to keep it hot. And the conversation ends. With fondue, it's different. It comes to the table hot, it stays hot, and you're all sharing the same dish."

The Cellar's also a great place for dessert and a nightcap (beer and wine only) or coffee. The dessert fondue we tried, the velvety Chocolate Grand Marnier, comes with berries, grapes, pineapple, cantaloupe and vanilla Belgian pirouette wafers. Other options include dark chocolate, chocolate with nuts, and peppermint patty, and all are $8 or $9.

AVENUE ONE AT THE HYATT REGENCY

One Avenue de Lafayette, Boston, 617-912-1234

Avenue One chef Brad Ozerdem is a fondue expert who's hosted several cheesemaker events, where he recounts fondue's origins and history. "Fondue resulted from an abundance of cheese in areas of Switzerland and France during the winter," he says. "There was ample cheese, wine and bread, and the sheepherders sustained themselves on these things through the winter. As the sheepherders turned into domestic help for the wealthy, the peasant fondue piqued the palates of the wealthy, and the dish spread via nobles bringing the dish to other nobles."

Ozerdem's secret for tasty results is simple: "Use good cheese and you get good fondue." Gruyère and Emmentaler from Switzerland form the base of Avenue One's traditional fondue ($18 for one or two people; $32 for three of four), served with bread, cornichon pickles and tomatoes (onions too, but they're optional). For the Berkshire Bleu Fondue ($18 or $32), Ozerdem uses a smooth and mellow local blue cheese, paired with bread, apples and juicy red pear for dipping. Different types of fondue occasionally turn up on the restaurant's menu as well, because Ozerdem always keeps an eye out for seasonal cheeses and other variations.

All of Avenue One's fondues are served in big cast-iron pots, over a Sterno flame. As you chat and chew the evening away, the cheese gets harder on the bottom of the pot; you can scrape it up with bread at the end. To cap off your evening, there's the velvety Callebaut chocolate fondue ($14). Served in a smaller bowl over a tea light, it's accompanied by bananas, strawberries, pineapple, chocolate-covered mini biscotti, and marshmallows.

As we scrape the last drops from the pot, Ozerdem explains some traditions associated with fondue. For example, if a man drops his bread in the fondue, he's supposed to buy a drink for everyone. If a woman loses her bread, she has to kiss all the men at the table. And if you're unfortunate enough to have your bread sink twice, you have to host the next fondue party.

Fondue is especially popular in Avenue One's lounge—during the winter, it accounts for 40 to 50 percent of the lounge's food sales, says Ozerdem. "It's probably because of two factors: we have long, cold winters, and we're a foodie town."

Avenue One's cheese fondue options include a traditional Gruyère and Emmentaler, and a blue cheese.

DEVILLE LOUNGE AT KINGS

50 Dalton St., Boston, 617-266-2695

"I'd never had fondue before deciding to put it on the menu," says Deville Lounge chef Art Welch. Yet he decided it would be a good fit for the funky, '50s-style lounge and started serving it a year ago, six months after Kings opened. "It was definitely fun experimenting with all the cheeses," he says.

In the lounge, adjacent to the bowling alley, you can sit at funky red booths, individual or communal tables, and when you're feasting on fondue, it's a total retro experience.

Welch changes the fondue offerings regularly but usually sticks with a cheese option. Right now, he's serving a fontina fondue, which you can order with marinated chicken or beef ($13) or vegetables ($12). We recommend ordering both the grilled chicken and the beef, as both are delicious and shareable. The morsels are tender and richly seasoned and, when coated in the hot cheese, heavenly. Veggies are seasonal, and usually include portobello mushrooms, red onions, and butternut squash.

If you're possessive about your food, this is the place for you. Each diner gets his or her own pot, so you aren't forced to share. Fondues "aren't usually served in individual portions like ours," Welch says. "I'm not big on the communal thing." One exception at Kings is the dessert fondue—a single large pot of creamy, warm caramel sauce. Though we'd already feasted on meat fondues, once we tasted Welch's dessert version, we knew there wouldn't be a drop left. The caramel comes with a heaping plate of peanut butter–and–chocolate ice cream sandwiches—dark chocolate brownies filled with two kinds of ice cream—dipped in a chocolate ganache. Welch says he and his crew enjoy making the sandwiches as much as we loved devouring them: "We make them in sheet pans, and when we trim the ends off, everyone gathers around and snacks on them."

TEMPLE BAR

1688 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-547-5055

The fondues are the most popular items on Temple Bar's menu, accounting for at least a third of the restaurant's daily sales, according to chef Dan Pogue. It's easy to see why: the atmosphere, with cushioned, semicircular booths and dim lighting, is ideal for canoodling with your cutie over a warm pot.

For Temple's dinner fondue, Pogue uses a Great Hill blue cheese, served in an attractive copper pot with freshly made focaccia bread and vegetable crudité ($13). The veggies—a big plate with plentiful portions of zucchini, squash, carrots, mushrooms—are cut "batonnet style," in small sticks, and the fondue itself is made with white wine, cream cheese, half-and-half, heavy cream and blue cheese. "Blue cheese makes a great fondue because it's so creamy and addictive," Pogue says.

This version is Pogue's, but fondue has been on Temple Bar's menu for five years. "Fondue is hot right now because it's the perfect dish to share as a group," he says. Pogue plans on switching the blue cheese to Vermont sharp cheddar this fall, "to reflect the seasonal change in available foods from New England."

Meanwhile, for dessert, the Belgian chocolate fondue comes in the same cute copper pot, with a plate of white and chocolate sponge cake, homemade chocolate and walnut biscotti, kiwi, banana and strawberry. The chocolate is simply stellar, and the sponge cake tastes like it's fresh from the oven.

A warning: While the menu describes the blue cheese fondue as an appetizer for two, if you're also going to order the chocolate fondue, you may not need an entrée—especially a rich, creamy one like risotto. Although delicious, it turned out to be a bit too much food. A couple next to us ordered both fondues too, but without the middle course. They skipped off cuddling, while we rolled out groaning and carrying a doggie bag containing most of our entrée.

Temple Bar's Belgian chocolate fondue comes with a panoply of goodies.

SHABU-ZEN

16 Tyler St., Boston, 617-292-8828

Shabu-shabu, the Japanese variant of European-style fondue, has been around for thousands of years. Instead of oil or cheese, shabu-shabu's fondue is a boiling broth, hot enough to cook the meats and veggies that you dip into it. Locally, shabu-shabu (which refers to the sound that the slices of meat make in the broth—sort of a "swish swish" noise) can be found at Shabu-Zen in Chinatown.

The bouillon-style shabu-shabu broth comes in many varieties. There's the simple, slightly salty house broth, a Thai style called Tom Yum, herbal Chinese, and a spicy Korean kimchee. But if you can't make up your mind (or don't like sharing) you can opt for two broths, served in a spiffy pot divided down the middle.

For the dunking items, you choose from an array of beef, pork, chicken, lamb (all $9.95); or seafood or vegetables ($11.95). You can also opt for the more high-end Kobe beef ($28), which melts in your mouth; or lobster (sold at market price); or for the more adventurous, beef tongue, tripe or squid ($3–$4 for a side order). The mushroom-heavy veggie plate is also loaded with frozen tofu chunks, corn, carrots, watercress and a few less familiar vegetables. (Be warned: while the meat cools off quickly, the veggies can be hot hot hot! Try a green tea smoothie or one of Shabu-Zen's signature sake bombs—a mixture of beer and sake—to cool the heat.)

The shabu-shabu sauces (for dipping after you've heated the morsel in the broth) allow you to tap your culinary creativity. You mix them yourself, starting with your own little tray of soy sauce. You can then add in a tangy Japanese sesame sauce, a Thai suki sauce, or Chinese seasonings: barbecue sauce, a red pepper concoction, scallions and minced garlic.

Unlike the Sterno-heated European fondue pots, Shabu-Zen uses an induction heater system that's built into the middle of each table. You control your broth's temperature with a switch on your table. Owner David Wong recommends heating your broth until it forms little bubbles—but not so hot that it boils away.

The natural question when faced with a plate of raw, thin slices of meat is, "How long do you cook it?" The answer, according to Wong, is as long as it takes to say "swish, swish." You skewer a slice, plunge it into the broth just long enough for two quick swishes, and it's ready! (He assures us that E. coli isn't a concern, even though your mother might disagree.) "You don't want to swish too long," he insists. "Any meat that's cooked too long becomes beef jerky." Finally, dunk it in the sauce and pop it in your mouth.

When you're done dunking, simply throw the rice or noodles that come with your meal into the remaining broth, heat them up and then pour the mixture into your soup bowl. "The kimchee broth is the best thing for a cold," says Wong. "When I have cold I eat it, and the next day I'm perfectly fine." IB

SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

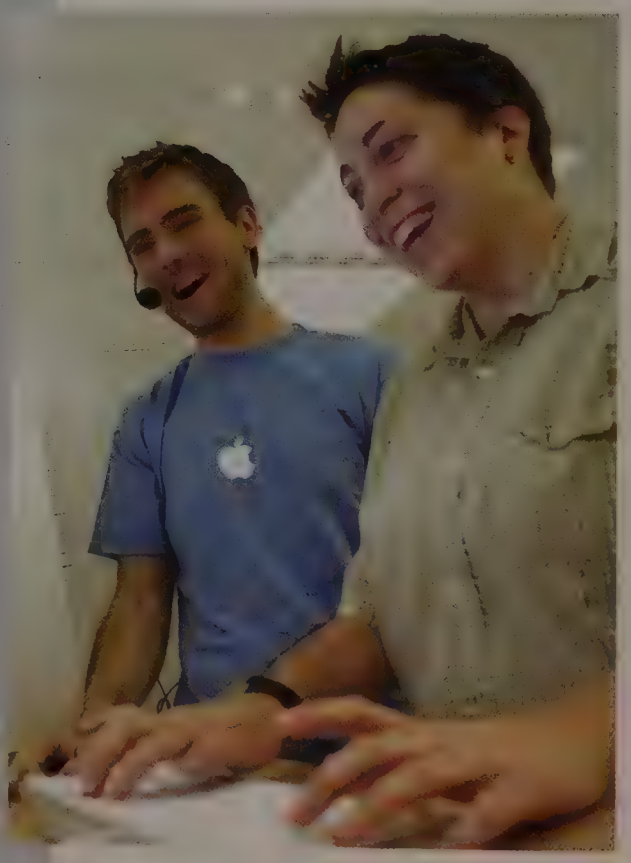
A DIFFERENT AGENDER

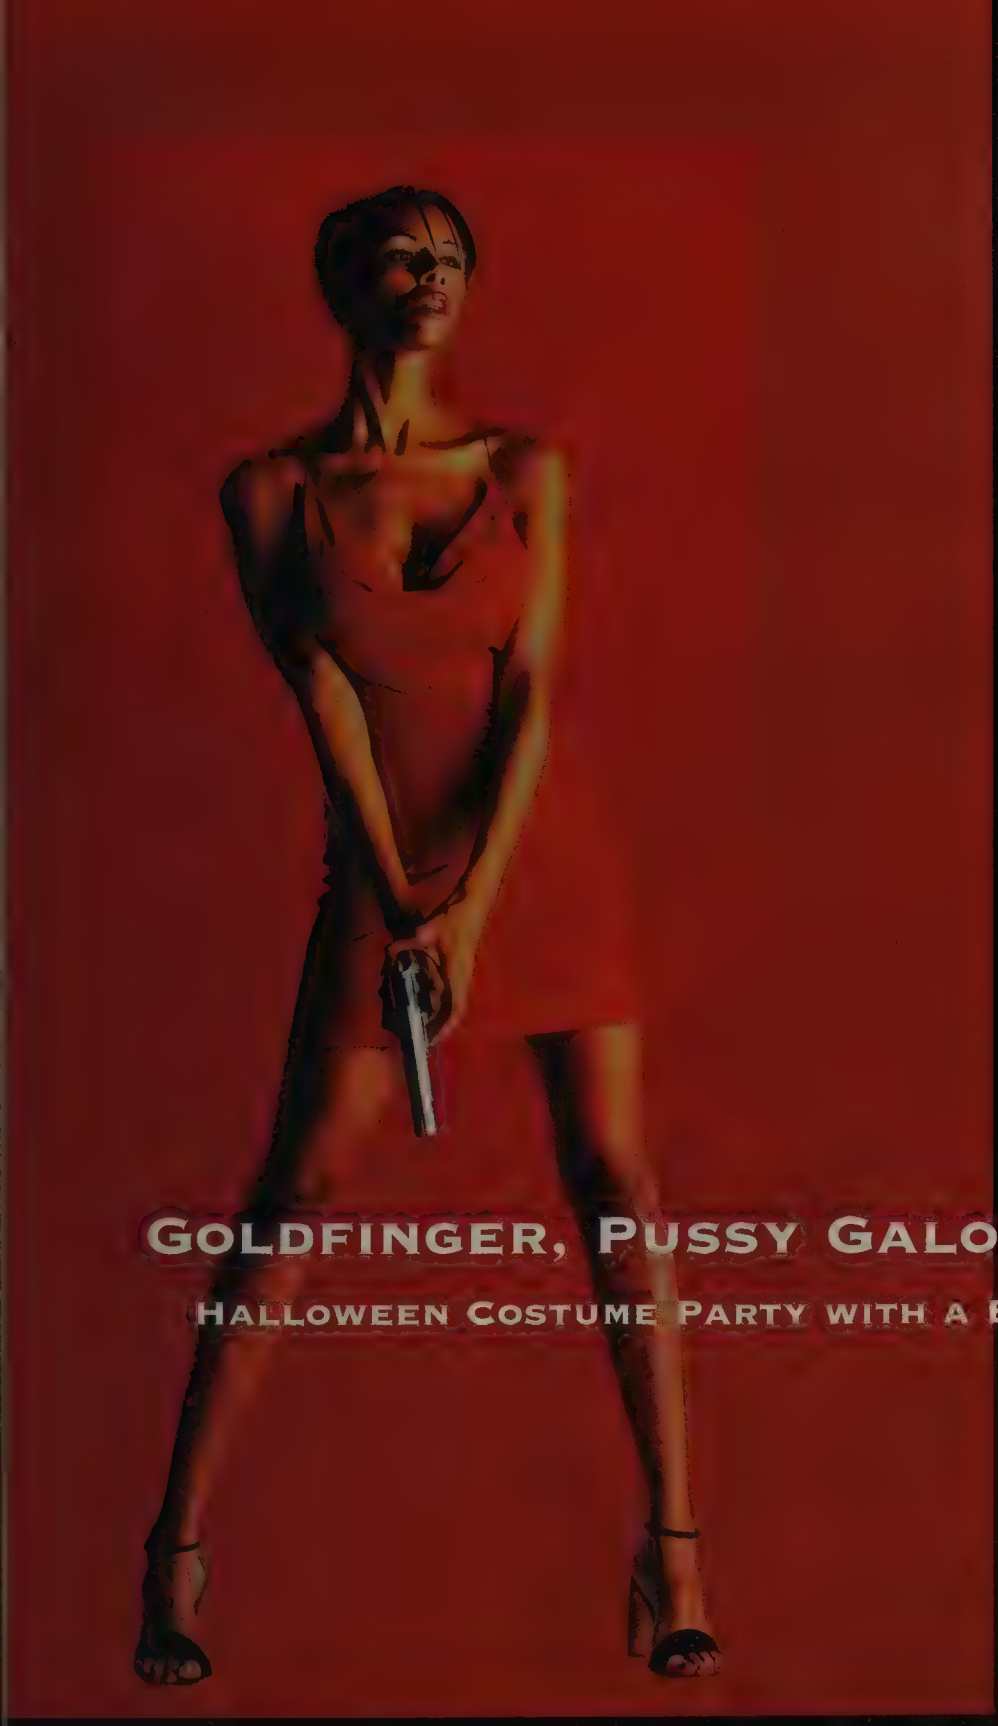
In their book, Same Difference, Rosalind Barnett, senior scientist at Brandeis' Women's Studies Research Center, and Caryl Rivers, professor of journalism at BU, challenge many beliefs about gender.

Gender has become a kind of commodity, with two main brands. The allegedly innate differences between men and women have been the basis for career-blazing claims by big-name theorists and therapists from Carol Gilligan, who staked a claim on the vulnerable adolescent "voice" of girls, ripe for laryngitis; to Mary Pipher, who worried about girls' languishing Ophelia-like self-esteem; to John Gay, who nabbed the planets for his gender metaphors. These and other "essentialist" notions have brought out a blazing refutation from therapist/scientist Barnett and journalist Rivers. The two have scanned scads of research studies to show that men—some from Mars, (or perhaps merely Malden)—may be linear, cerebral, directions-asking-averse; or alternatively, mild, poetic and homebodyish. And women—from Venus (or Medford)—may be nurturing and gentle, or ambitious, hard-headed and not even particularly maternal. The authors contrast large studies that strongly indicate more differences exist within the land of guys (ditto of girls) than between the two sexes with small-sampled, wobbly and equivocal research supposedly demonstrating that men are so X and women inevitably Y. Encouragement and permission to live and think outside these constraining boxes can help both men and women lead happier lives. But these strong women bracingly oppose buying the "hardwired" gender stereotypes.



A FEW GOOD MENSWEAR PIECES

Drinkwater's, an elegant men's store full of clothes in loden, wool, cotton, alpaca and cashmere, is at 2067 Mass. Ave. in Cambridge, just past Porter Square. It's a dog-friendly store. Call 617-547-2067.



This new clothing store for men manages to combine chic style with a kind of friendly airiness. Partly it's the location, out beyond crowded Porter Square in the historic Henderson Carriage Building, with brick walls, cork floors and wooden beams. Gary Drinkwater, a veteran of Louis Boston and other upscale menswear shops, sharply highlights distinctive pieces made of beautiful fabrics. The Schneider's of Salzburg midlength raincoat, cotton with Teflon treatment, is lined to the waist in plaid wool, a friend for all seasons. Jackets—like the Glen Plaid Prince of Wales two-button sport coat that goes with various pants and can be dressed up or down, or the 100 percent bouclé jacket with a woolly nap—convey both solidity and lightness of being. Sweaters come in tenderest baby alpaca with a softer "saddle shoulder." Clothing by Japanese designer Daiki Suzuki has a wonderful crinkly, spacious feel; he likes button flies and patch pockets, and his yellow canvas barn coat combines interesting, slightly outsize fashion detail but looks like a man might wear it in a real barn (or in town.) Suzuki's gorgeous gray flannel "canoe bags," with their equestrian-style straps, are laptoppable or backpackable, looking both boyish and scholarly.

TAKE AN EASY GIGABYTE OF YOUR APPLE

The Apple Store in the Cambridgeside Galleria offers a free Mac class, lasting about 1½ hours, every Saturday at 9 am. No appointment required.

If you're PCing (parting company) with your PC or have just bought a new Mac, you can simply show up and learn about it at this class. One teacher, Jordan, a chipper techno hound wearing flip-flops, projects the computer screen onto the big screen. By click-walking the class through many of the Mac's doings, finding, dragging and dropping, attaching, minimizing, choosing varying modes of display, organizing music and pictures in this writ-large format, he makes it all seem easier. He demonstrates adornments and tricks your Mac can perform—retouching a photo, for instance, eliminating an unsightly cut, or arranging photo albums in varied formats. He gives some access to the ways that information may be buried "deep" and can be found under the various layers of your operating system. Jordan gently extols the virtues of the Mac over some perceived flaws in the competition—among them, susceptibility to crashes and viruses. Most students have at least one burning, highly particular question, which can either be answered then and there or referred to a "genius," as they call their technicians. And if you're used to dealing with computer helpers only when the roof leaks, it's nice to get a tour of the talents of the healthy machine.

THE ANTI-GYRO

From kolokythokeftedes to galeos kavalas, Meze Estiatorio takes Boston's Greek cuisine to a new level.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

Greek Americans' energy and business savvy are evident in the many successful eateries they own across the country. They range from fine dining to low-key pizzerias and diners like the one hilariously caricatured on Saturday Night Live by John Belushi and Dan Aykroyd. Notwithstanding Greek-Americans' success as restaurateurs, establishments serving Greek cuisine, aside from the occasional moussaka, spanakopita or baklava, are relatively rare. Perhaps it's testimony to the relentlessness of American assimilation, or a too facile acceptance of the belief that "people want what they know and know what they want."

Not any longer, at least in Boston. Meze Estiatorio (the word estiatorio means restaurant in Greek) opened with a splash in Charlestown a year ago, and it's been playing to enthusiastic diners from the get-go. Its menu, uncompromisingly Greek, makes no concessions to American palates—although its oversized portions will appeal to many American appetites.

Meze occupies the ground floor of a new brick building at the northern end of the Charlestown Bridge, on one side of City Square. Just across the street is Charlestown's most famous restaurant, Todd English's Olives. Indeed, Meze's chef de cuisine, David Fitzgerald, worked at Olives, and some of the culinary instincts he picked up from chef English—particularly the multiplication of ingredients and aversion to empty space on a plate—are evident in his work.

Meze's airy, spacious interior, with beige walls and a high ceiling with teardrop chandeliers, seats more than 100 patrons in the dining room, another 40 in an alcove off the long bar that's visible from the dining room through an open arcade, and up to 50 more in a private dining room. Tables are dressed with beige linens, votive candles, high-stemmed wine glasses and elegant tableware. The beautiful Zakim–Bunker Hill Bridge, with its soaring steel suspension illuminated in the evening, makes a striking, almost awe-inspiring view from the curved wall of windows facing west. A large open kitchen at the back end of the dining room becomes a beehive of activity as the restaurant fills up later in the evening.

The mithia ouzata consists of black mussels steamed in lobster stock, with feta cheese, tomatoes, garlic and fresh herbs.

Moist, garlicky puree of potatoes and beans, aromatic with olive oil and studded with luscious, jumbo Greek olives, accompanied coarse-grained bread as we perused the menu. The plethora of exciting-sounding dishes made choosing difficult, leading to over-ordering so shameless that my group ended up with multiple doggie bags. While the kria mezethakia (cold plates) and zesta mezethakia (hot plates) were described by an earlier reviewer as "tapas-like small plates," something must have been lost in the translation, because far from resembling typical one- or two-bite tapas, these well-put-together treats turned out to be larger than conventional appetizers and only slighter smaller than main courses. For example, the dolmadakia yialandzi ($9) brought a nicely presented stack of four hefty cylinders of rice, onion, carrot and tomato blended with minced parsley and dill and wrapped in moist, tender, brined grape leaves almost three inches long and over an inch wide. Redolent of fresh lemon—lemons, olives and garlic, with their lively, aromatic flavor, are recurring notes in Meze's cuisine—they made the perfect appetite perkers. Two of them would have made an ample starter for all but the most gargantuan of appetites.

Among the hot appetizers, a trio of spanakopita ($9)—phyllo pastry turnovers stuffed with spinach, leeks and feta cheese—were two or three times the size of spanakopita customarily served as hors d'oeuvres. Even though the phyllo dough was light and delicate, the butter between each of the ultrathin layers gave it a richness that belied this delicacy. The stuffing of spinach and leeks, two of my favorite vegetables, combined with creamy feta cheese, created a moist, savory, mouth-filling delight.

Among the most memorable of Meze's first courses were the kolokythokeftedes ($9), fritters of zucchini and cheese pan-fried in olive oil. The deliciously herbaceous flavor of fresh zucchini, melded with the mellow creaminess of the cheese spiked with an emphatic dose of mint, almost exploded in the mouth with flavor. A generous dollop of tzatziki—yogurt flavored with cucumber, muted garlic, lemon and more mint—was almost superfluous but very good in its own right.

Meze's vegetable-based hot plates would delight and satisfy the most committed of vegetarians, but the restaurant does not ignore its carnivorous patrons. Youverlakia mytilinis ($9) brought three large lamb and rice meatballs that had been simmered in an eggy, lemony sauce. Again, the prominent flavor of fresh mint, an herb with a special affinity to lamb (as those of us brought up in households where mint jelly inevitably accompanied leg of lamb know) added a lively, piquant note to these moist, meaty treasures. Finally, loukaniko ($9), homemade Greek sausages grilled over a wood fire in a fashion that sealed in their moist goodness, boasted an engaging combination of spices, a touch of heat and an intriguing aroma of fresh oranges. The two hefty sausages were halved and presented in inviting fashion on a plate of arugula alternating with segments of juicy orange.

Baklava served with Attiki honey ice cream

Meze's main courses touched all the bases, from meat to poultry to seafood to makaronia (pasta). Lamb, perhaps the meat used most widely in Greek cooking, was represented in several of Meze's offerings. We enjoyed paithakia stin skara ($34), three thick, juicy rib chops dusted with herbs (particularly oregano), grilled over a hot flame, and leaned against a giant cylinder of mashed potatoes infused with feta cheese and tender green olives and topped with slices of tomato, eggplant and zucchini. The lamb was tender, juicy and flavorful, and the substantial potato-olive-feta-tomato-eggplant garnish superb, if a little overwrought. The kotopoulo stin souvla, roast chicken ($24), was similarly unrestrained in size and multiplicity of ingredients. This large half chicken, deboned except for the drumstick and wing, came perched on top of garlicky roasted baby potatoes and artichokes, caramelized onions, a sweet pepper jam and a portobello mushroom cap. Here, the variegated garnishes overwhelmed the somewhat bland but surprisingly moist chicken.

Greece is a seafaring nation, and I would have been remiss if I hadn't sampled one of Meze's six seafood offerings. Seeking out the most streamlined of these, I chose the galeos kavalas ($28), a filet of halibut. The kitchen rewarded my choice with an oversized slab of firm, moist, fresh halibut of impeccable texture combined with the most imaginative of Meze's accompaniments, a tamale of cornmeal encasing mild feta cheese and fresh, sweet kernels of corn. Again, the kitchen appeared to proceed from the conviction that more is more, serving two hefty cylinders of tamale, guaranteeing they'd either be shared or brought home.

After the size and quality of Meze's first and main courses, desserts seemed almost beside the point. The baklava, thick cylinders of phyllo dough stuffed with nuts and cinnamon and drizzled with warm honey, must have packed 1,500 calories, not counting the honey ice cream with which they were served. Less rich—and really less successful—the dionysia, slender chocolate-almond cake "cigars" wrapped in phyllo and served with crème anglaise, whipped cream and raspberry sauce, catered to the chocolate-tooth. Unfortunately, the phyllo dough in both of these desserts seemed dense and undistinguished, a far cry from the delicate phyllo of the spanakopita.

Besides favoring its patrons with authentic Greek cuisine, Meze offers an interesting and, for American wine lists, unusual array of Greek wines. Agiorgitiko, a red grape that's sometimes compared with merlot or grenache, appeared in two of my choices, one the 2001 Megapanos, a big wine with a full body and pleasant bouquet. Although its tannins were soft, the wine retained good structure that stood up to the food. A slightly drier, more austere wine was the agiorgitiko–cabernet sauvignon blend, also of the 2001 vintage, whose acidity also made it a good food accompaniment. Both of these wines were priced at $32 a bottle or $8 for a generous glass and were worth every penny. For some reason, they were listed only under the heading "wine by the glass," and were not part of the larger list of bottles, which started at a significantly higher price.

Meze's staff, smartly attired in all black, served us with energy, attentiveness and professionalism. It's easy to see how the restaurant's large expanse might adversely affect service on a busy night, but on the evenings of my visits, there appeared to be at least one head waiter, attired identically to the others, who roamed over the whole dining room and kept things moving at a good pace. iB

Tapas Triumph

Brennan takes trophy… Jacky Robert back in town

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Laura Brennan took top honors at the James Beard House Tapas Challenge.

You've probably heard about the trouble at the James Beard Foundation in New York City—allegations of financial impropriety against a former executive director, an ongoing state investigation—but have you heard about the tapas? The third annual Tapas Challenge at the James Beard House took place on September 26 and it's much better news, with a local angle and happy ending. Three of Boston's finest chefs—defending champion Barbara Lynch of No. 9 Park, the Butcher Shop, and B&G Oysters; Gabriel Frasca of Spire at Nine Zero; and Laura Brennan, owner/chef of Caffé Umbra—competed for the coveted trophy.

Each presented three courses, paired with a wine, to a panel of Beard committee judges known as the Greens. (Because they're well dressed? Because they're mixed? No, because they're under 40 years old.) After the dishes were tasted, the wine sipped and the votes counted, the winner was declared to be Brennan's third course: warmed beef short rib terrine with celery root salad and a Venetian-inspired porcini peara sauce, matched with turkey flat grenache. The Tapas Trophy is Brennan's to cherish until next year, when she'll return to the Beard House to compete against two chefs of her choosing in the fourth Tapas Challenge.

Wishing you were there? Brennan plans to feature her winning entry, as well as other contest-worthy fare, sometime later this month at Caffé Umbra. And in case you're wondering, Brennan reports that none of the Greens breathed a word about the greenbacks scandal.

SECOND COURSE

Now for good news on top of good news: After a brief stint, mostly in management, at the Chatham Bars Inn, chef Jacky Robert is not only back in Boston, he's back in the kitchen, cooking. Although his long-term local plans are geared toward opening his own place ("a bistro, with touches of Asian, and downstairs a pastry bar"), right now you'll find him happily preparing such classic French fare as beef Burgundy and Normandy-style tripe in the freshly opened Pierrot Bistrot. A simple storefront setting warmed with persimmon-painted walls, dark woodwork and brick, Pierrot is located "on the unfashionable side of Beacon Hill," acknowledges co-owner Same Nedialkova—which is another way of saying it's on Cambridge Street across from Massachusetts General Hospital. Well, forget fashionable; Pierrot Bistrot is French! Not pretentious. Not fussy. Not (surprise!) expensive. The best-selling boeuf bourguignon, with its tender, aromatically winy beef and perfectly cooked vegetables, is a most reasonable $14.75 at dinner. And the prix fixe dinner, including a choice of three first courses, three main courses, and pastry or sorbet for dessert, is a bargain at $26.95.

Prices may be non–Maison Robert, but you hear French music; your waitress is French; your table's white cloth is brushed with an elegant silver French crumber (le crustbuster?); and your dining experience is overseen by the eagle eye of co-owner Pierre Sosnitsky. Before moving to Boston years ago to work with Robert at Maison Robert, and then at the new Locke-Ober, Sosnitsky owned a highly regarded restaurant in Virginia and was maître d' at the chichi Sans Souci in Washington, D.C. After more than 30 years in the industry, he has no patience for snobbery or sloppiness.

"You pay the same price, you get treated the same," he declaims. "If you do something, do it right or not at all." In general, he says, "success is the relationship between people. With Jacky here, I sleep very well at night."

Which begs the question: Is Jacky Robert the official chef at Pierrot Bistrot, at least for the time being? Robert smiles. "I am…consulting," he says. Could consulting lead to commitment under the right circumstances? Que sera, sera. We'll keep you posted. IB

Music: A Southern Sound

Since way back in the mid 1980s, Southern Culture on the Skids has been churning out a crossbreed of hillbilly hoedown jamboree and old-fashioned rock and roll. Sound like a good post-voting activity? Even if it doesn't, check them out at the Middle East Downstairs and you'll find yourself craving hush-puppies and hankering for moonshine. Joining Southern Culture on the bill are Dana Stewart & the Old Howards and El Gringo. 18+. 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-492-9181). 8 pm. $15.

Movies: Gaelic Scene

These days, we're willing to bet that if asked what the words "Irish cinema" bring to mind, the majority of the American population would likely respond "Colin Farrell." Sure, the Hollywood heartthrob might be one of the most popular Irish exports (alcohol aside) in recent memory, but he's not the only reason to see an Irish film. Six years ago, Dublin native Peter Flynn decided to bring the full scope of Irish cinema and television to the Hub with the Boston Irish Film Festival. Tired of seeing Ireland portrayed as the cliched, romantic Emerald Isle in American-made films like Far and Away, Flynn organized the festival to screen films that aren't distributed in American theaters. The sixth annual festival, sponsored by Magner's Irish cider, screens at the Brattle Theatre and the Harvard Film Archive October 21-25 and boasts nearly 35 entries, including documentaries, features and shorts. Highlights include Bloom, Sean Walsh's 2003 adaptation of James Joyce's novel Ulysses, and the festival's best-feature winner, Timbuktu, Alan Gilsenan's film about a young Irish woman who crosses the Sahara in search of her missing brother. The film's producers and directors appear at many of the screenings. And while Colin Farrell will not be in attendance, you can cap off the festival by listening to the gentle brogue of BIFF's equally hunky guest of honor Gabriel Byrne, who receives the festival's 2004 Excellence Award in a ceremony at the Brattle on closing night. Brattle Theatre, 40 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-876-6837). Harvard Film Archive, 24 Quincy St., Cambridge (617-495-4700). www.irishfilmfestival.com. $8–$10 per screening.

Books & Poetry: Get Shorty

For the past 89 years, Houghton Mifflin Co. and a distinguished guest editor have performed what most literati consider the inconceivable: reading nearly all the short fiction published in the U.S. and selecting the very best for its The Best American Short Stories. The 2004 edition has arrived, and to celebrate, guest editor Lorrie Moore and PEN New England invite all who appreciate the art of the short story to gather at the American Repertory Theatre for an evening of literature as live theater. For the past six years, PEN's gala has honored the Best American series with a wine and cheese reception followed by selected readings by a noted actor. In the past Debra Winger, Hume Cronyn and Eli Wallach have done the honors, and this year Wallace Shawn, perhaps best known for his repeated comic delivery of the word "inconceivable" in Rob Reiner's The Princess Bride, brings the short stories to life. American Repertory Theatre, 64 Brattle St. Cambridge (617-547-8300). www.pen-ne.org. 7 pm. $35.

The 2003 Life Is Good Pumpkin Festival

CityScope: Pumpkin Party

Can our beloved burg muster up more pumpkin power than the folks in Keene, N.H., did when they set the Guinness World Record? That's the goal of The Life Is Good Pumpkin Festival, where organizers hope to decorate Boston Common with thousands of carved pumpkins and break the record for the most lit jack-o'-lanterns in one place. (Keene got 28,952 jack-o'-lanterns going at once in 2003.) In addition to the blazing gourds, there'll also be a slew of live bands (Entrain, Superhoney, Muck and the Mires and Apollo Sunshine), a pie-eating contest, a costume parade, a magic show, rock-climbing walls, cookie decorating and a hay maze. Better still, while the little 'uns are getting their faces painted, you can take a break in the massage tent. Halloween costumes and the costume parade are optional, and you'll need to bring your own pumpkin if you want to carve a jack-o'-lantern. (You can take it home if you get attached to it.) Proceeds from food sales benefit Camp Sunshine, a national retreat for children with life-threatening illnesses and their families. 11 am–9 pm (617-961-3051). www.lifeisgood.com.

Eager young agent Daniel (Michael Kaye) and cynical veteran Howard (Steven Barkhimer) track John Lennon in Ears on a Beatle.

OCT. 22–NOV. 30

Performing Arts: Bugged, Off Broadway

If you were shocked when former folk crooner Cat Stevens was detained by U.S. officials for alleged terrorist activity a few weeks ago, let us remind you that he's not the first famous name to end up on a government "watch list." The Lyric Stage Company's production of Mark St. Germain's off-Broadway hit Ears on a Beatle recounts one of the most bizarre incidences of celebrity suspicion: the FBI's surveillance of former Beatle John Lennon in the early 1970s. Set against a backdrop of Nixon administration paranoia, two FBI agents (a veteran and a novice) form an unlikely friendship when they're assigned to keep tabs on Lennon because of his opposition to the Vietnam War. In addition to connecting the characters' personal lives to political and cultural events of the day, à la Forrest Gump, Ears also includes voiceovers by Dick Cavett, host of the popular TV talk show on which guest John Lennon famously claimed in 1972 that the FBI was tapping his phone line. Lyric Stage Company, 140 Clarendon St., Boston (617-437-7172). www.lyricstage.com. $19–$43.

My Left Feet

BY PAUL SHERMAN

It's hard to think of an American remake of a foreign film that's as faithful to the original as Shall We Dance? Whole scenes are practically line-for-line reshoots of action in the 1996 Japanese hit about a "salaryman" whose drab life turns upbeat when he starts secretly taking ballroom dancing lessons.

But while the Japanese original was a charmer that won you over, the American remake struggles to do so, stumbling in its early going and its resolution, despite a strong midsection. It's not so much what this new Shall We Dance? does that's problematic, since it mostly just retraces the footsteps of the original. It's how it retraces those steps.

Jennifer Lopez and Richard Gere do an emotional two-step in the American remake of Shall We Dance?

This Shall We Dance? gets the proverbial Hollywood treatment, and all that the cliché suggests: It has stars that don't always have the everyday quality of their characters; its American gregariousness smothers the Japanese reserve that was a hallmark of the original; and it awkwardly reaches for big "Hollywood" moments.

Richard Gere is an awfully slick choice for the 9-to-5 commuter numbed by the rut that his life has become. Instead of a mere office drone, the hero is a Chicago estate lawyer in the remake, a move that's not so important as the many voice-overs in which he talks about his work, which are apparently supposed to metaphorically apply to his dance foray, but never do. Gere plays John Clark, who rides home on the El and regularly eyes a beautiful woman pensively staring out the window of a dance school.

She's Paulina (Jennifer Lopez), an instructor at the dance school where John impulsively signs up for classes, only to learn that sad-eyed Paulina, who's still mooning over the loss of her dance partner and of a big competition, teaches only expensive private lessons. He and two other male newcomers (Bobby Cannavale from The Station Agent, Omar Benson Miller) will get older Mitzi (Anita Gillette) for instruction. John doesn't tell wife Beverly (Susan Sarandon), who's as wrapped up in her department store job as he is in his work, about the classes.

Although Shall We Dance? is a bit hyper at first and lacks the quiet elegance of the original, it does hit its stride midway through and becomes an amusing ensemble comedy for a time. Adding comic relief during this stretch are Stanley Tucci as a co-worker who also has a secret life as a Latin dancer (featuring a wig and an alter ego), Lisa Ann Walter as a brassy, busty dancer who brazenly injects herself into the lives of the dance students, and Richard Jenkins and Nick Cannon as the philosophical private detectives Beverly hires when she fears John might be having an affair. Most of these characters get worked up about ballroom dancing, thanks to their connection to John.

The bolstered role of the wife is the remake's biggest trouble spot. The scenes of Beverly at work with her two overemotional underlings are cringe-worthy, while the casting of formidable Sarandon in a role that has to show vulnerability is tricky (she's fairly unconvincing in the scene when she hires the detectives to spy on John). Although it would clearly not work to have the American wife be as submissive as the Japanese one, the confrontation between Beverly and John, after she shows up at a dance contest he's competing in, is an overblown mess in which they block traffic in an underground garage.

Lopez, though, shows effective restraint, as Paulina fends off John's crush yet comes to respect and like him, finding a renewed taste for dancing from his love of it. In more dubious "Hollywood treatment," though, director Peter Chelsom (Funnybones) and writer Audrey Wells devalue the movie's climax, in which John and Paulina dance, by giving them a big dance scene two-thirds of the way through the story. Of course, the climax also suffers mightily from the use of Peter Gabriel's syrupy song "Book of Love," as it creakily provides an overkill of happy resolutions for everyone. It's that sort of "generosity" that derails Shall We Dance? You had to "lean in" to the modest Japanese original. That intimacy was part of its charm. This version hits you over the head sometimes, making you recoil. Where's the charm in that? iB

Shall We Dance? ★★

Directed by Peter Chelsom. Written by Audrey Wells. With Richard Gere, Jennifer Lopez, Susan Sarandon, Stanley Tucci, Anita Gillette, Lisa Ann Walter, Richard Jenkins, Bobby Cannavale and Nick Cannon. Rated PG-13. At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.

Dig ★★★
Ondi Timoner's documentary about the up-an down relationship between the bands the Dan Warhols and the Brian Jonestown Massacre is at most interesting when it touches upon the battle b tween creativity and commerce. Each band has decide how much it's willing to compromise to g its music heard, and for a time the bands are coho in fighting the system. As sensible Dandy Warh leader Courtney Taylor's and self-destructive Bri Jonestown Massacre leader Anton Newcombe's re tionship with each other becomes more co tentious, though, the bands actually become less i teresting, despite the supposed drama, and so do the movie. (At Kendall Square.)

A Dirty Shame ★★
It's been 34 years since Multiple Maniacs, John W ters' comedy in which the heroes performed in a bellious traveling "Cavalcade of Perversion." If h new movie, in which Baltimore blue-collar sex a dicts are the heroes, had been made then, it mig have worked. But nowadays, when sex is used to s everything and pervades the media (from Stern Springer to Spears), it seems awfully passé. Tha part of the reason the laughs are sparse and only a fe characters are consistently amusing (mainly Suzan Shepherd as the crusty leader of the "decency" forc fighting the sex addicts and Jackie Hoffman as one the more creative sexaholics). Too much of t movie just seems sophomoric. (At Kendall Squa and Waltham Embassy.)

Donnie Darko: The Director's Cut ★★½
If it ain't broke, don't fix it. Writer-director Richa Kelly's brilliant Donnie Darko returns—not in t version that struck an emotional chord in so ma despite being barely marketed in 2001, but in Don Darko: The Director's Cut, a new version running minutes longer. Except this isn't a true "directo cut"; this 133-minute version never existed bef now. If you haven't seen Donnie Darko, the origi version is a better introduction; if you have, you probably seen the added stuff already. Most of t "restored" footage comes from deleted scenes on t Donnie Darko DVD. Meanwhile, Kelly has also go back and changed some of the songs to what he or inally wanted, but couldn't afford in the budget. E wait a minute. Kelly originally wanted U2's "ML at the climax, not Michael Andrews and Gary Jul unforgettably haunting version of Tears for Fea "Mad World," which became a surprise hit. So w didn't he replace that too? Kelly should have mained satisfied with the other happy accidents his movie as well. (Midnight shows at Coolidge C ner, Oct. 22, 23 and 29.)

Garden State ★★½
The first film by actor-director Zach Braff (T Scrubs) has its moments of daffy humor, as Br plays a struggling L.A. actor who returns to his N Jersey hometown for the first time in nine years. recaptures the mixed emotions of such a visit, esp cially of seeing old high school friends, but it trea on very familiar territory. It feels like it wants to b version of The Graduate directed by Wes Anders (Rushmore), and it struggles to find any voice of own. Plus, the story of a guy returning to his hom town who develops a quick bond with a Nata Portman character has already been done, in 199 Beautiful Girls. Braff and Portman have a pleas chemistry, and Braff is to be commended for tryi to make something quirky and personal. But it's ha not to feel this movie is redundant. (At Bost Common, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Gloomy Sunday ★★
After a quick run in the city, Rolf Schubel's roman drama has been playing a show a day at West Ne ton Cinema for over a year, but this cult hit is har an unusual movie. Although German, it's a Hol wood-style bon bon, and the movie it most resemb is Titanic. Like that mega-hit, this period piece gra extreme fiction onto well-known fact—in this ca about the classic song "Gloomy Sunday" (before B lie Holiday covered it), its European composer a World War II. The Titanic-style melodrama is prob bly the reason it's clicked with many people, alo with the pure allure of stunning leading lady Eri Marozsan. But despite the movie's overripe charm times, it's hard to see it as anything more than har somely crafted cheese. (At West Newton.)

Hero ★★★
Zhang Yimou's drama is the dreamiest martial a movie since Wong Kar Wai's Ashes of Time, wh which it shares stars Tony Leung, Chiu Wai a Maggie Cheung. This period piece about feu China soars during its creative fight scenes, thou he production design regularly gets out of hand ome scenes are so superficially "pretty" they look ke perfume commercials). The title character ayed by Jet Li can also be as inexpressive as a mpulsive Botox patient. But this is ambitious uff, and the fight scenes and larger-than-life rama, fueled mostly by Cheung's performance, ften pay off handsomely. (At Copley Place, Harrd Square and suburbs.)

[heart] Huckabees ★★★

riter-director David O. Russell's world is a chaotic he in which he amusingly forces characters to face to their place in it, sometimes willingly, sometmes not. In Russell's latest film, troubled activist lbert (Jason Schwartzman) is somewhat willing, t he's not prepared to be pulled into the rabbit ole by the existential detectives (Lily Tomlin, ustin Hoffman) he hires to find meaning in his life. he duo drags Albert into the lives of his nemesis ude Law)—a junior executive trying to turn Alrt's environmental group into a P.R.-friendly front r his chainstore—and a fellow client (Mark ahlberg) obsessed with petroleum consumption. he movie ricochets around like a pinball, sometmes distractingly so, but just about every direction heads in is hilarious. (At Boston Common and arvard Square.)

he Last Shot ★★★½

his 1980s-set comedy is based on a true story about sting on Rhode Island mobsters conducted by FBI ents pretending to produce a movie (the R.I. mob d been extorting money from film productions). lec Baldwin is very funny as the FBI agent who etends to be a producer in order to nab a Province mafioso (Tony Shalhoub), while Matthew oderick is the unsuspecting aspiring writer whose ript goes into pre-production but never gets out of Writer-director Jeff Nathanson cleverly spoofs ollywood through such amusing characters as the I's crass Hollywood etiquette "tutor" (Joan Cuk) and the movie-within-a-movie's self-involved r (Toni Collette). But The Last Shot is also an afctionate tribute to the seductive charms of the silr screen, as the movie dreams of both the agent d the writer—who's talked into making dozens of mpromises, such as filming Arizona action in Lit- Rhody—grow too large to be stopped by the enorpus complications that arise. (At Copley Place d suburbs.)

he Machinist ★★½

rmer Bostonian Brad Anderson's latest isn't as pping as it might have been, but it's an intriguing, ilight Zone–style slab of genre story. Christian Bale ys the frazzled hero, an insomniac who's losing his nd and, literally, his body. Bale dropped a ton of ight for the part, but turns his meaty role into re than a freak. As the story progresses, we learn ere are concrete reasons why the guy has been ecking out from reality, and the movie's grimy vils perfectly reflect his state of mind. The Machinist more in the line of Anderson's creepy Session 9 an his arthouse hit Next Stop Wonderland, which is e with me. (At Harvard Square.)

econstruction ★★★

iter-director Christoffer Boe's stylish Danish rontic drama takes place at least partially within head of one of its characters. But is it the head of photographer (Nikolaj Lie Kaas) who's unsure of love for his girlfriend (Maria Bonnevie)? The nected married woman he meets (Bonnevie, as ll) and starts a fling with? Or the woman's novel- husband (Krister Kenriksson)? The story cernly gets balled up in such questions by the time over, but its adulterous central relationship also es off a palpable charge of physical attraction, d it's such an intriguing experience that the film er becomes as pretentious as it might have. (At ndall Square.)

haun of the Dead ★★★

ector and cowriter Edgar Wright's zombie com- isn't just a horror spoof à la Scream, it's a movie ut funny characters. Wright knows how to set up s and put them across, and horror has nothing to with his characters' amusing habits, like saying ha's that supposed to mean?" to glaringly obvious usations. Like the zombies that slowly surround n and his circle of friends, the title character of s very funny English comedy springs back to life r the course of the movie. Shaun (co-writer ion Pegg) is an affable bloke whose lack of ambin finds him stuck at a job requiring a name tag, d whose lack of romantic inspiration finds him nped by girlfriend Liz (Kate Ashfield). But when mbies walk the streets of London, Shaun leads the vivors (to the pub, of course). Shots are fired, h is ripped, friends are mourned and, somewhere ng the way, Liz is perhaps convinced that Shaun left his feckless ways behind him. (At Boston mmon, Fenway, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Sky Captain and the World of Tomorrow ★★

This retro-futuristic action-adventure—using computer-generated special effects to re-create a late-1930s concept of science fiction—is the PT Cruiser of movies. It seems kinda neat at first, but you steadily realize it's just another mediocre new product. The trouble with this story about a reporter (Gwyneth Paltrow) and an aviator (Jude Law) who thwart a doomsday scheme is that however straight-faced and authentic it promises to be, it's too much like the many other movies that have taken inspiration from the same place (this is especially true of Edward Shearmur's music, which sounds cringingly like John Williams' scores, and the revival of Angelina Jolie's dreadful Lara Croft English accent). Paltrow and Law have little zing together (maybe George Clooney could have pulled off the hardness and humor of the dashing title role), and ultimately the film comes off like a disappointing attempt at Raiders of the Lost Ark–style homage. (At Boston Common and suburbs.)

Tarnation ★★★½

In a year of too many remakes, sequels and "same old, same old" movies, Jonathan Caouette's distinctive documentary stands out. Culled from 20 years of the home movies he's shot since he was a boy, it tells the unforgettable, tragedy-laced story of his family, and of his relationship with his mother Renee, who was subjected to numerous sessions of questionable electro-shock therapy as a teenager. It's a cycle of madness that Jonathan's grandparents foisted on his mom, and that he has continued to try to fight off. Almost as remarkable as the family history is the way Caouette tells the personal story, in a fast-moving collage of home movies punctuated by deadpan, on-screen text. Few movies this year have been as compellingly involving. (At Kendall Square.)

Taxi ★

Tired, tedious action-comedy buddy movie from director Tim Story (Barbershop), with one credible star (Queen Latifah) and one who seems totally in over his head (Jimmy Fallon). She's a hot-rodding New York cabbie with NASCAR dreams, and he's an inept cop who pulls her into the task of chasing down a gang of gorgeous Brazilian bank robbers. The plot and the gags rarely rise above the utterly mediocre. (At Copley Place, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

What the Bleep Do We Know? ★★

It's different, all right, but that's not always a good thing in this new-agey blend of documentary and drama from three first-time directors. The documentary has some generally interesting scientific theorizing about the way the body perceives the world and about the effects of emotion on cells. But the interesting stuff is married to goofy animation and, even worse and even goofier, dramatic sequences starring Marlee Matlin as a two-timed photographer who undergoes an attitude adjustment. Her scenes are as clunky as an airline safety video. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

The Yes Men ★★★

When pranksters Mike Bonanno and Andy Bichlbaum set up a spoof Web site of the World Trade Organization's page, some groups mistook the spoof for the real thing and asked for a WTO rep to come speak at their conferences. This documentary follows the pair as they prepare for and carry out what they call "public spectacles," in which they espouse absurd profit-first policies and see how much media coverage they can get for their pranks. During one speech, they tout the value of cheap, remote labor (better than slavery because there are no transportation charges to be recouped!); in another, they make a presentation for the "ReBurger," in which human waste from fast food is treated and made into new burgers for third world residents to enjoy. You don't learn much about these guys in the movie, but their deeds are a kick in the pants. (At Copley and Harvard Square.)

Revolutionary Times

Steve Earle charts an immediate course for political change.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

There's an extraordinary groundswell among musicians this election season to oust President Bush, from the Vote for Change caravan led by Bruce Springsteen, R.E.M., the Dixie Chicks and others to Green Day's punk opera, American Idiot.

"It's a whole different thing than it was," says roots-rocker Steve Earle, whose feisty new disc, The Revolution Starts...Now, certainly hasn't generated the controversy that "John Walker's Blues," a track from his 2002 CD Jerusalem that took the viewpoint of that American Taliban figure, inspired.

Steve Earle rushed to finish his new album, The Revolution Starts...Now, before the upcoming presidential election.

"When Jerusalem came out, the people I pissed off were the people I was trying to piss off," Earle says from his Nashville office. "What was more telling was the silence from the center and the left. People were genuinely scared, and that's starting to wear off. People have finally gotten scared enough to do something, and that's what it takes."

But is there a revolution brewing in the campaign? "The [illegible] is f---ed up because we went to sleep," says Earle, who [illegible] Avalon October 26. "For me, what the songs [on the new [illegible] are about is the fact that the revolution starts as soon as [illegible] wake up and realize that it goes on with or without us. I [illegible] advocate violent revolution, only because it has been proven not to work. If we're vigilant, this country can be much more progressive."

In his liner notes to The Revolution Starts...Now, Earle states, "The word 'immediate' best describes the atmosphere around the studio as this record was being made." That applies to both the message and the process. With only the title track and "Rich Man's War" completed, Earle shifted into 14-hour days to finish the CD in time for the presidential race.

"By four or five days into it, I was waking up with a blank sheet of paper and writing a song that morning, then going from there [into the studio to record]," Earle says.

He must work well under pressure, as The Revolution Starts...Now ranks among Earle's best work. It ranges from the honky-tonk "Home to Houston" (about a truck driver in Iraq praying for safe return) and the stomping "F the CC" (a kiss-off to the FCC, FBI and CIA) to the edgy, spoken-word "Warrior," which evokes Shakespeare in addition to the Doors and Patti Smith.

"The spoken-word piece ended up being one of the things that sorta saved my butt," Earle says. "I just woke up one morning and turned on my TV, and Kenneth Branagh's version of Henry V was on. I thought, 'Shit, that's what I can do,' and I got on the Internet and downloaded the prologue to Henry V. I divided it into three stanzas, used that as a template, and wrote 34 lines in iambic pentameter."

There are a few lighter tracks, including the folksy duet with Emmylou Harris, "Comin' Around," and the lusty reggae ditty "Condi, Condi," a bizarre ode to National Security Advisor Condalezza Rice. "I think she's kinda hot," Earle says. "She doesn't have the usual fashion challenges that the Republicans do. And that hair, damn!"

But while the president is never mentioned by name on the CD, Earle's main agenda is clear. "I find it increasingly hard to write chick songs in this political atmosphere," says the 49-year-old, who began his activism as a Texas teenager protesting the Vietnam War. He adds, "This [war in Iraq] has the potential to be a thousand times worse than Vietnam."

His biggest concern about four more years of Bush? "The end of civilization as we know it, and that's not a joke," he says. "Everything we are doing now makes it more dangerous to be an American, here or abroad. The rhetoric about a safer America coming from the Bush administration is the biggest lie I ever heard, and I'm in the music business!"

Earle has traveled a rocky road in the music business—and in life—since his 1986 debut, Guitar Town, introduced his New Traditionalist country influenced by Springsteen as well as Texan mentors Guy Clark and Townes Van Zandt. In the early '90s, after being fired by his record label, he became a drug addict and spent four months in prison. "It saved my life," says Earle, clean for 10 years and now 65 pounds lighter on the Atkins diet. "There comes a time when you just have to take care of yourself. Now I have to stop smoking cigarettes. I haven't gotten close to that yet."

In the meantime, he's on the road through October, playing mostly swing states. Will he be preaching to the converted in Boston? "I don't take anything for granted," says Earle. iB

A New Bigshot at the BSO

Conductor makes long-awaited Boston debut.

James Levine leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time October 22.

Finally, he's here. James Levine, The Boston Symphony Orchestra's new music director, takes the podium October 22 to open his first eight-week series of concerts as leader of the home band. The BSO has been without a permanent conductor since Seiji Ozawa's departure two years ago (Levine's prior conducting commitments necessitated the wait).

The shift from Ozawa to Levine means more than trading a shaggy mop-top for a stupendous afro. For one, the orchestra will sit differently onstage. Under Ozawa, all the lower strings—violas, cellos, and basses—sat together stage left, with the first and second violins stage right. Levine hates that arrangement: "You sit there and hear this huge low waaaaah coming from one side of the stage," he said in the press conference announcing his appointment.

Instead, Levine places the basses behind the firsts stage right, moves the violas and cellos to the inside, and places the seconds to his right on the outside of the stage. The sound is noticeably different; the bass lines play more of a supporting role, and the second violins don't have to fight their way through a wall of sound to be heard clearly.

Another noticeable change will be in the performance repertory. While Ozawa was committed to new compositions, Levine is fanatic about it. One concert in March features two world premieres, unheard of by any standard. And in addition to brand new works, Levine has also programmed lots of early-20th-century repertory, "to show people where contemporary music comes from," as he puts it. So get used to plenty of Hindemith, Stravinsky and Schoenberg—and not much Beethoven (only two works the entire season). Not that it's affected ticket sales: Levine's first week is sold out, and the rest of his opening run is nearly so.

You'll Find Him in Da Club

Boston DJ stays busy behind the tables.

It seems like most DJs these days can get by with, in the words of Beck, "two turntables and a microphone." But if that's the case, let's just hope that local spinner DJ Adilson's tables and mike are packed with the resiliency of the Energizer Bunny.

DJ Adilson can be seen each week at Axis, Rumor, Venue, Matrix and the Roxy.

The native Brazilian and 16-year Beantown resident has formed a strong hold on the local club scene, spinning on five nights at five different venues. Last month, he took over Static Mondays at Axis, one of the city's most popular gay nights.

"I always loved music growing up in Brazil," Adilson says, "but everyone always told me I had to do it with an instrument. I'm proving them wrong."

In addition to Axis, Adilson spins a Latino Alternative night at Rumor on Wednesdays and Brazilian Sundays at Venue and is the centerpiece of two of the city's most popular weekend hot spots, Fridays at Matrix and Saturdays at the Roxy. Both nights draw well over a 1,000 partiers each week.

"It's great," he says. "I never get bored because every night I'm playing to a different kind of crowd and spin a different style of music."

Of course he isn't bored going out every night and doing what he loves most, but don't hold your breath for night No. 6.

"Five is enough," Adilson laughs.

The World's Best Rum Has Reached Boston!

Ron Zacapa Centenario – A Rum Without Peer

Ron Zacapa Centenario, from the small Guatemalan town of Zacapaneca, is often regarded as the world's finest rum. Part of the secret lies in the cool-climate aging; by storing the rum in bodegas 8,000 feet above sea level, the spirit is able to age slowly and gracefully for 23 years, much longer than other fine sipping rums. Pick up a bottle of Centenario, grasp the unique palm leaf wrapper woven by local artisans, and you immediately sense this is a rum without peer.

Zacapa Mojito
2 oz. Ron Zacapa Centenario
Juice of two limes
2 tbs. superfine granulated sugar
Splash club soda
5-10 mint leaves

Combine ingredients in a cocktail shaker with ice. Shake and strain into an ice-filled glass. Top with a splash of club soda and garnish with a sprig of mint.

Honey Martini
Created by Christopher (Stretch) Gerdon, China Grill, Miami
2 1/2 oz. Zacapa Centenario
1 oz. of diluted Honey
Squeeze 1/2 Lemon
Splash of Soda Water

Shake juice and ingredients together with ice, and strain into martini glass. Add splash of soda and garnish with lime wheel.

Tamarind Rum Punch
(Created by Chuck Simeone, Spice Market, NYC)
1 1/2 oz. Ron Zacapa Centenario
2 1/2 oz. tamarind nectar

Shake all ingredients with ice and strain into an ice-filled highball glass. Garnish with a cocktail straw.

- The Only Rum To Receive 4 Consecutive Gold Medals at The Rum Fesitval of Barbados 1998,1999,2000,2001
- A 98 Point Rating from the Wine Enthusiast, the highest score ever for a rum.

PHOTO CONTEST

THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN is proud to launch its first photography contest. We invite photographers whose work fits the contest's theme, Hidden Boston, to send us (previously unpublished) pictures of the city: its people, its objects and its landscape.

SPECIFICATIONS

Since the winning images will run in our December 1 issue, photographs of the outdoors should depict fall or winter in the city.

PRIZES

Prizes will be awarded for 1st, 2nd and 3rd place winners in each of the two categories (places/objects, and people). A panel of professional photographers will judge all entries.

DEADLINE

Deadline for entries is Tuesday, November 9, 2004. Entries received after this date will not be eligible for the contest.

SEND ALL ENTRIES TO

Photo Contest
The Improper Bostonian Magazine
142 Berkeley St., 3rd Floor
Boston, MA 02116

WINNERS

CONTEST RULES

1. The contest is free and open to all photographers who live in Boston and the surrounding area. The submitted work may not have been previously published or used in any promotional effort.

2. We will accept photographic prints, digital images and slides. If you wish to have your entry returned, please include a self-addressed stamped envelope. Entries will be returned following the publication date (December 1, 2004).
   a. Digital images must be at least 300 dpi at 8"x 10" and be submitted on a CD. If CD contains multiple entries, please state what category each entry belongs in by file name on a printed page submitted with the CD.
   b. Printed materials must be unmounted and have relevant entry information affixed to the back of the image (see #6 for details). No laser or inkjet printouts will be accepted. Photographers must supply negatives for winning prints.

3. Entries may be color or black-and-white.

4. The deadline for entries is Tuesday, November 9, 2004. Entries received after this date will not be eligible for the contest.

5. A signed model release form must be provided upon request for images that contain easily identifiable people.

6. Each photograph must be clearly labeled with the following information: 1) Category, 2) Photo location, 3) Photographer's name, 4) Photographer's address and 5) Photographer's phone number and email address, for prize notification.

7. Photographs will be judged on treatment of the subject matter, visual effectiveness and technical ability.

8. All winning photographers must grant first-time publication rights to THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN. Photo credits will be given.

9. Winners will be notified in advance of the publication date, December 1, 2004.

Dave at the Bar Near Fenway

OK, so I worked for you about two years ago and even though I have only seen you once since then, I have had a huge crush on you ever since. You are flat out hot and when I worked for you, you seemed like a nice guy. So yeah, I want to go on a date with you and basically that's all I have to say. If you see this, e-mail me and tell me your last name so I know it's you and then I'll tell you mine. Oh, and then, I'll rock your world.

—Lovesit3456@yahoo.com

To Gary at the Tiki Lounge

You are a jackass.

—The "Jealous" girl

What's the Big Rush?

I'd like to give a shout-out to all of the people in their 20s who are getting engaged, married and having babies. I don't understand the urgency right now to have the whole white-picket-fence life. I mean, is there nothing else you think you can do as an individual? Is there no more you'd like to do—and you're all set with the person you're with every single day? Is it not possible that you may be settling for something right now, for fear that it won't appear later in life? I thought living in the city and dating was the fun part of being young—and now it seems everyone wants to grow up so fast. I feel like a part of the deep South has started to hit our beloved Boston. I lived in the South for five years and most of my friends went to college down there to get a husband. I moved back up here to gain experience in life—not become like everyone else. Maybe my biological clock is behind the rest of the world, but I am content with myself right now, and my goals, ambition and life plan. I guess my question was more rhetorical—but I just don't understand the current trend.

—The Un-Newlywed

Pete R.

I think I spotted you in Pearl in Cambridge on September 27. A few years ago we had dinner a few times. We talked about traffic lights at the Grasshopper and you almost went on a trip to Guatemala with me. I thought you moved out to the Midwest after you graduated. If you're in town, if it was you I spotted, you should drop a line.

—Jen

Not in Such a Rush

I ran into you at Store 24 in Charlestown. I was wearing a black polo and shorts, you were wearing a smile brighter than any I've ever seen. We chatted about who should go first in line and both agreed that after work we're not in such a rush anymore. You thanked me as you left the counter, and I was awestruck and couldn't get out a word. I'd love to have another chance to learn how to speak.

—drew1212242@yahoo.com

To Nick Flynn,

I heard you read from your new book at Barnes & Noble at Boston University September 17. I was sitting to your right, third row back, blonde hair, striped shirt and black skirt. In about a half hour, you were able to invoke feelings of sadness, loss, excitement and happiness in me all at once. Though I've been on God's path for almost three years, it has still been difficult to feel any emotion in its entirety. Your words made me feel alive.

You wrote "Welcome to the Eternal Present" on the inside cover of my book, and I think I have such a clearer meaning of what that means now. Thanks for your hope and beauty.

—A Fan in Suck City

Applefest Half-Marathon

To the guy who ran in the Applefest half-marathon in Hollis, N.H., October 2. I looked for you after the race to thank you for taking the time to pick up my tape after I clumsily dropped it at about mile 8. Without A Tribe Called Quest, I don't think I would have had the motivation to keep going at my target pace...especially with all of those hills! Thanks again, and maybe I'll see you next year!

—Keep on running

Cornelius,

Happy Birthday to the best lawn wrangler that ever wrangled! Max Fischer's got nothing on you. Let's get lucky!

Make My Dream Come True

I am the girl in white, walking slowly on the arm of a man I will love forever. You are the serious-looking guy in a tux, no doubt sweating, and patiently awaiting my arrival. All of the bright flashes and expressive faces from my sides are creating the dream like tunnel for me to pass through. My focus is on the strong standing, familiar figure in the distance. As I move closer, it becomes clear that this is not a dream. I see you and want to run into your arms. I too will be patient and take in every moment and feeling of this day; the day I will vow before God, family and friends to spend the rest of my life making you as happy as you make me. Meet me and make my dreams come true. Happy Wedding Day!

—Dreamgirl

My Fox

Whether sipping wine at Lo Conte's or drinking Abita at the Bulldog, you make my life extraordinary. Thank you for following me to Lucky's and beyond. As our adventure continues, know that you have tamed me as I have tamed you. Two down, the rest of our lives to go.

—Your Rose

Ciao, Ms. Mistral

Thanks for reaching out. It's been "two" long. Perhaps we should pick up our conversation about our favorite places sometime. If you'd like to do that, drop me an e-mail and we'll pick up where we left off.

—itnyfr@yahoo.com

The Big Dog on Newbury Street

I noticed you walking your German shepherd past the Starbucks on upper Newbury Street. I was sitting alone at a table outside, wearing a gray, hooded sweatshirt. You were in a baby blue shirt and jeans. Your dog seemed to walk you more than you walked him. You had the most amazing smile on your face, even though you could barely keep up. Our eyes met and I asked if you needed help. You laughed and said it was good exercise. Hoping you and your giant dog will pass my way again.

—Starbucks Girl

Brookline Star

To the cute blond boy from Boston College who I kept running into at the Star Market in Brookline Sept. 26, let's make it a spaghetti dinner for two.

—Der

Sox-Shooter

To the photo-girl in the Red Sox press box next to the team's dugout with the long brown hair and tight blue jeans: I can't believe my luck that I had season tickets just several rows behind you and saw you nearly every home game. I also can't believe I never walked the short distance to ask you your name. You were more exciting to watch than Manny.

rockie horoscope

LIBRA SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

By dealing with one issue at a time, one person after another, you can do a fairly decent job of clearing up the confusion at home or among other family members. You could also wait until impressionable Neptune comes out of its retrograde stupor on the 24th and begins to lift the fog that encompassed you in May. Or you can stall until Venus enters Libra on the 28th and makes whatever you're offering more desirable. However, while there's passion and power behind your words, why wait?

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

You're in a situation somewhat similar to your Libra neighbor's this week, i.e., empowered by the strong emotions behind well-chosen words, especially if your audience belongs to a group you were once allied with. There's something inexplicably arousing about the connection between your passionate Pluto co-ruler and affectionate Venus, so if the conversation heats up or the wordplay becomes suggestive, you may decide to press on to the natural conclusion. You could also play it safe and pass.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Since so many unexpressed emotions may surface when Venus challenges Pluto in your sign this week, gird yourself for the fallout. Not only another Sagittarius, but a Virgo, Libra, Taurus or Scorpio you either work with or are related to might launch a purely personal attack. While you've defended yourself before or, more effective yet, ignored what was being said, this time information you've kept to yourself may be released to the public. Everything else is up in the air until the full moon eclipse kicks off the scary Halloween weekend.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Information that may have gotten your goat last week could turn out to be a full-fledged problem this week when your well-organized Saturn ruler is tested by the Libra sun. Rest assured you won't be alone in this matter; Saturn in your Cancer house of partners ensures that a significant other will also feel the squeeze. This hard-working person may have a better chance of succeeding right now than you do, so if you can comfortably relinquish a modicum of control, do it.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Your current attitude about yourself, what you want and how you intend to go about getting it may change when impressionable Neptune in your sign changes direction on the 24th. Will you become more idealistic or suddenly turn cynical? Less image-conscious or more artificially enhanced? You might also notice that your workload feels burdensome and that your exercise routine no longer energizes you. Try to persevere, because you'll be amply rewarded with compliments and kudos, perhaps a prize, by Thanksgiving.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Having responsible Saturn in your house of romance, recreation and risk means always having to say you're sorry. And when the willful sun tests Saturn, as it does this week, you may come to the conclusion that you're the one who has to pay if you still want to play. A child or a lover can be especially problematic right now. Try to enlist the help of significant others; if they won't contribute financially, they may have other resources, e.g., information or connections, you can tap into.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

This is when two years' worth of visualization, planning and step-by-step follow-through finally comes to fruition. While your single-minded Mars ruler and idealistic Neptune form a rewarding trine, your hidden talent—perseverance?—becomes evident to all concerned, especially an ally who has maintained a "fair and balanced" distance. Despite one more challenge around Thanksgiving, figure on launching another project in April when the Mars-Neptune conjunctio inaugurates the next two-year cycle.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

A lot more passion than you expected can be unleashed when your Venus ruler is tested, teased and turned on by manipulative Pluto. Down-and-dirty is how Pluto in your house of sex and transformation prefers to play, so make sure you're prepared for a memorable encounter. Since this aspect is better suited to Halloween fun and games, the appropriate costume could be just what the doctor ordered. A career matter that has you puzzled becomes less ambiguous next week after nebulous Neptune inches forward.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Although a question about a career or family issue may b answered while your informative Mercury ruler calms erratic Uranus, it is far from the last word on the subject. Mercury in secretive Scorpio tends to discover facts that have been suppressed or simply unavailable, but when th Messenger advances to expansive Sagittarius a few days after the election, that knowledge may become wide-spread. Apply this timeline to your own situation, factoring in the resolution of a lingering financial hassle around Halloween.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

If you had the foresight to stick last issue's forecast on the fridge, you know what to expect for the rest of the month. You may also have a hint of how the Libra new moon/solar eclipse will affect what you're currently into. But if you're still wondering, simply wait until the sun moves out of its challenging square to Saturn in your sig Crabs born close to the Leo cusp are the ones currently facing the restrictive policies of the dour, sour planet. Those who have already shouldered Saturn's responsi-bilities should be relieved.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

You don't have to understand why you're paying dues as long as you realize that you're feeling drained, anxious or depressed simply because your ebullient sun ruler is being restrained by sad-sack Saturn energy. Get past this brief encounter with harsh reality, and your innate good spirits should bounce back in time for UN Day. The 24th is also when elusive Neptune in your house of partners—past an present—turns direct. Shortly thereafter, there'll be news to surprise and delight you. A veritable breakthrough.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Relish the last of the homage being paid, the attention you're receiving, because magnetic Venus remains in Virg only until the 28th. And while you won't go back to being plain Jane, other aspects of your life could be affected by the total lunar eclipse that week. Stay focused on various money matters, since a steady hand plus good research ca help you steer through the waves, the financial highs and lows, generated by the eclipse. You seem to be more psychic whenever your Mercury ruler is in Scorpio, so follow your intuition.

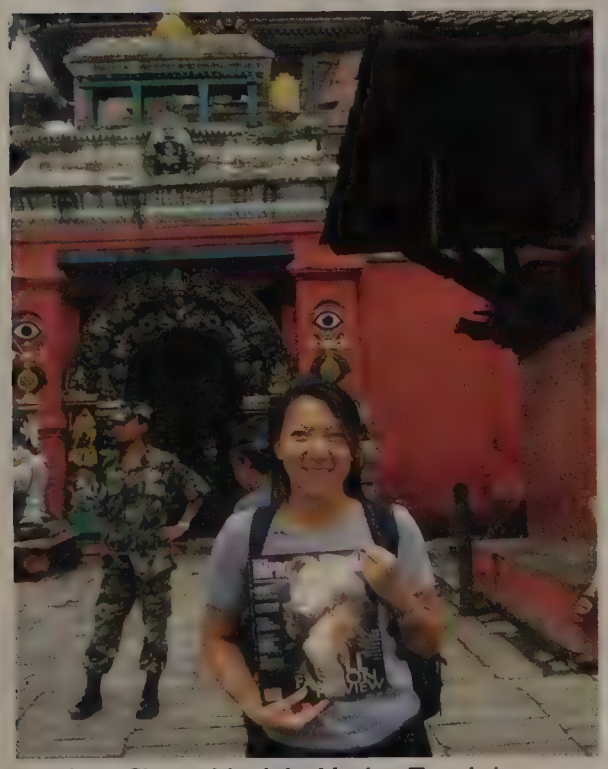
IMPROPER sightings

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.



Kristen and Ashley Rumble spent their honeymoon in St. Lucia, West Indies. Ashley is a British lord, thus making him a royal Rumble.

Cindy Rodzen and Andrea Whipple ventured to Samburu National Reserve in Kenya, where warriors Seraiyo, Sidai, Learamu and Buku rechristened furry green idol Wally the Green Monster as "Jobu."

Mississippi Governor Haley Barbour and aide de camp Joe Cloyd know that we can thank their state for Dunkin' Donuts' excellent new Mississippi lids.

May-Lynn Chang visited the Monkey Temple in Kathmandu, Nepal. It's guarded by the brass monkey.

Sharon Marsh hiked to Cloud's Rest in Yosemite National Park in California, where dehumidifier use has driven clouds to extinction.

Alex Iglecia and Beth Turgeon flied one on at the El Avión restaurant in Manuel Antonio, Costa Rica.

Green Briar 304 Washington St., Brighton 517-789-4100. A little taste of Ireland with great tasting, affordable food. One of the most popular nightspots in town, the Green Briar has become the area's headquarters for international sports viewing and live entertainment. Live music five nights a week, featuring local bands on weekends, a traditional Irish Seissun every Monday night and Prime Time Trivia every Tuesday. The hospitable atmosphere makes the Green Briar an excellent place to hold luncheons, wedding rehearsals, social gatherings and small business meetings. Open 11am - 1am 7 days a week. Cover charge varies on Friday and Saturday nights and some sporting events on Sundays.

The Green Dragon 11Marshall St., Boston, 617-367-0055. Hailed "Headquarters of the Revolution," this favorite after work meeting place is famous for it's "giant cocktail drink special menu." A comfortable place serving lunch and dinner and highly acclaimed Irish breakfast every Sat. & Sun. from 11am to 3pm. The tavern toasts over 15 beers on tap, 20 different bottled "brewskies" and imported Irish brews. Live music and entertainment every Thursday through Sunday night.

Kinvara 34 Harvard Ave., Allston 617-783-400. At the Kinvara, the crowd is spirited, the staff is hospitable, the food is great and everyone is treated as a "regular". It's the local gathering place with authentic Irish pub flavor. Live international sports viewing via satellite includes soccer, rugby and hurling. Live bands entertain to a lively crowd on weekends. The mainstream pub fare menu ranges from grilled sandwiches and fish & chips to traditional Irish dishes and innovative daily specials. At the Kinvara, you'll enjoy a true Irish pub experience. Open 11am - 2am 7 days a week.

Mr. Dooley's Boston Tavern 77 Broad St., Boston, 617-338-5656. Hailed by the Globe as "the gem of the Financial District," Mr. Dooley's is a favorite meeting place for young professionals. The authentic Irish pub with over 13 imported beers on tap has been voted "Boston's Best Burgers" and "Best Cheap Eats." Open daily until 2am, featuring live bands every Fri. through Sun. night. "A great place for a pint and a chat."

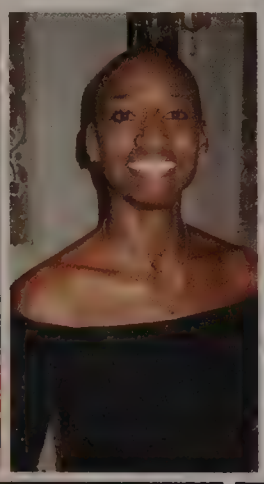
LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

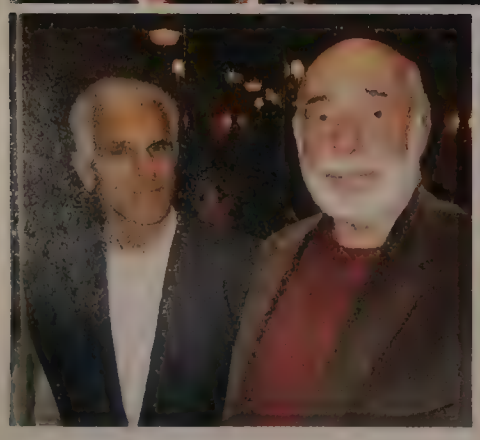
At the Boston Music Awards, top: Terry and Tom Hamilton. Bottom: Oedipus.

WHERE'S SID VICIOUS WHEN YOU NEED HIM?

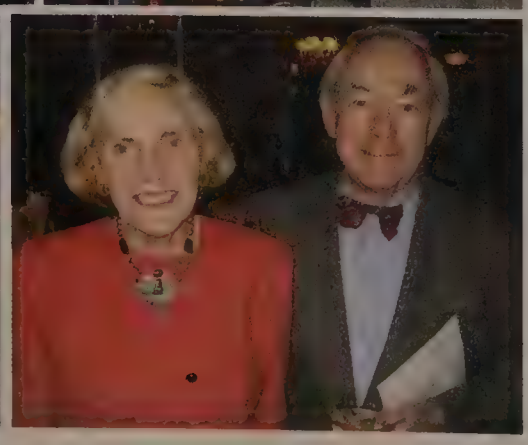


On the fun scale, attending an awards ceremony is right up there with an IRS audit and getting a root canal, but the NEMO Foundation took the sting out of it by hosting the 17th annual Boston Music Awards at Avalon.

Outside, there may have been a dearth of limousines, hyperventilating teenage fans and other trappings of rock 'n' roll fabulousness (unless you count the two stretch Hummers parked down the block), but there was a reasonable level of celebrity wattage inside, and attendees at the VIP reception had a chance to lubricate themselves adequately before the evening got under way.



Present and accounted for: Aerosmith bassist Tom Hamilton and his stunning spouse, Terry; hip-hop mega-star Mr. Lif; folk heartthrob Ellis Paul; Celtics legend Bill Russell; alternababe Kay Hanley; radio god Oedipus; drive-time DJ and Burt Convy stunt double Neal Robert; former Extreme member Paul Geary; Wang CEO Josiah Spaulding Jr.; filmmaker John MacNeil; lunachick Linda Comstock; record producer Ralph Jaccodine; marketing beauty Radka Opalka; perky publicist Erika Schermerhorn; rock photographer Leo Gozbekian; hometown favorites the Dropkick Murphys; legendary '50s doo-wop group the G-Clefs; and lots of people with important hair, significant tattoos and imaginative body piercings, making some bold fashion statements.



Of course, musical hipster mystique requires adopting a blasé attitude toward everything, which explains why many attendees affected complete boredom during the awards portion of the evening, which was blessedly short and was spiced up by live performances.

At the BALF auction, clockwise from top left: Rhys Gardiner; Andrea Spence; Lynne Smith and Angela Menino; Smoki Bacon and Dick Concannon; Louis Mula and Edgar Knudsen

It also explains comments like the following, overheard in line for the bar: "What's wrong with rock stars today? Nobody ODs on heroin anymore."

WHAT WOULD EMILY POST DO?

If fantasy auctions have become the workhorses of charity fund-raising, the Boston Adult Literacy Fund has a prize-winning Clydesdale on its hands.

The organization's 12th Auction for Literacy, held in the ballroom of the Colonnade Hotel, featured items such as a game of Pictionary at the Cambridge home of intellectual giants Anne Bernays and Justin Kaplan, an inscribed first edition by Nobel Prize–winning poet Seamus Heaney, a day of bird-watching with guidebook author and foremost authority David Allen Sibley, and literary immortality in the form of having your name assigned to a character in the next mystery by Jeremiah Healy.

Among the glitterati and literati on-hand: TV personalities Smoki Bacon and Dick Concannon; babe-alicious blonde news anchor Lisa Hughes; movie theater executive Edgar Knudsen and his other half, Louis Mula; Brahmin beauty Rhys Gardiner; bejeweled fashion designer Paula Jaq'lyn; ubiquitous do-gooders Gary and Lynne Smith; first lady Angela Menino; Cambridge eminences Joan and John Bok; the breathtakingly beautiful Andrea Spence and so on and so forth.

"I have an interesting problem," said one guest. "I'm having lunch with a writer whose new book is all about anal sex, and I'm not sure how to broach the subject politely."

Truth be told, neither do we, but we'd suggest waiting until after the dishes are cleared.

WHO NEEDS BOTOX?

For design junkies, touring a furniture showroom is akin to ogling porn, so for them, the Design Walk About proved to be a highly titillating evening to benefit the Institute of Contemporary Art.

After visiting upscale home furnishing stores like Montage, Thomas Moser, Landry & Arcari, Arclinea, the Morson Collection and Adesso, guests gathered in the atrium of 10 St. James St. for a cocktail reception and raffle.

Prominent among the throng: interior designers Heather Wells and Tatiana Armstrong; real estate titan Tony Pangaro; visual artist Julie Bargeron and graphic designer Deb Savona; Arclinea owner Philip Guarino; Montage owners Chris and Liz Bates; and one fashion plate who responded to a compliment on her scarf by saying, "Thanks. I think it's made of rabbit testicles."

However, the evening's funniest exchange took place when a man was being introduced to a woman and said, "I think we met once when you worked over at the Design Center."

"Oh, I've blocked out that whole period of my life," she said.

"But you were there a long time, weren't you?"

"Yes," she said. "Which means that as far as I'm concerned, I'm still only 27." IB

SEEING RED

Red Sox caps, tees, and even red body paint might be the hottest fashions on the streets of Boston these days. But when you feel ready to separate from those wardrobe essentials for a few hours (and don't let us rush you), our Winter Fashion issue is here with some fresh ideas and advice.

On these pages you'll find the latest looks for the coming season—from coats in every color to trendy metallic accessories and flashy diamond jewelry to the sleek suits the fashion world has decreed a must for men.

The last few pages of this issue were shipping to the printer as the Sox won the World Series, so our Red Sox tribute will appear in our November 17 issue. But be sure to read Chris Collins' column on page 18 of this issue, and check out Rich Levine's pre-Series Q&A with Johnny Damon (The Word, page 10).

BOOK 'EM

I'm surprised that author Ben Mezrich has such poor reading comprehension skills (Letters, Oct. 20). In its Literary Issue, the IMPROPER was clearly looking to feature writers who were of the up-and-coming set, and Susan Orlean earned the cover as contest judge, interviewee of Soroff, and, yes, Boston-based writer. As well, Ben contradicts himself: whining for your attention and then reminding you of his IMPROPER interview in 1997. His cheap plug will hopefully be transparent enough to not yield book sales. There are other Boston area authors who've surpassed your achievement, Ben. Perhaps, like Gish Jen, you might turn out something new and then come calling.

As for Orem's short story being poorly researched, it was also grammatically awkward. Long sentences are fine when done with literary mastery, but Orem's read like run-ons (even though they weren't). I also feel strongly that next year's contest should allow for different types of writing; that way, those of us who excel at essays, poetry or news stories might have a chance to compete.

BIG FOUR?

There is no such thing as the "Big Four" in Boston sports anymore (The Collins Card, Oct. 20). Sports radio in this town invariably refers to the period between the Super Bowl and the start of spring training as "the dead zone." Any mention of a team besides the Red Sox and Patriots is usually met with some sort of ridicule. At least the Bruins managed to pull some decent TV numbers in the playoffs, while the Celtics were competing with the Revolution just to make the Tuesday ratings chart. That said, Boston is a two-horse town, and with, of all things, an NBA lockout looming next year, this may become a two-horse nation.

—CHRIS PECK
Waltham

Chris Collins' column about the NHL lockout in this past issue of the IMPROPER was a good article and I enjoyed it. He closed the piece with the question, "Is this still a hockey town?" Well, Chris, being a lifelong hockey fan (40 years) and hardly missing any games, I think I can answer that question. I believe the answer is nobody misses the NHL now because hockey disappeared over 15 years ago.

The NHL Board of Governors expanded a little too much, thus watering down the league with players who couldn't have played minor league hockey 15 or 20 years ago. Transferring a regional game where fans are loyal and knowledgeable to other places where hockey is just a night out wasn't progressive, either. You don't make progress by taking one step forward (expansion to Florida, Phoenix, etc.) and one step back (moving teams from known passionate cities like Quebec, Hartford and Winnipeg).

Which brings me to the style aspect of the game. It seems that the players being drafted are no less than 6'5", 250-pound cyborgs that can skate like the wind and still don't have an ounce of finesse. Combine that with the fact that everyone wears padding made by NASA that's five times bigger than the past, throw in the fact that everyone wears helmets, and you end up with a rink that's been outgrown by players who make it look like a giant pinball machine.

Mention the game of 30 years ago and everyone seems to remember the fighting. What everyone seems to forget is that there was a hell of a lot more finesse in the game as well.

Question: Do you think that if there had been a lockout in the late '70s the response in Boston would have been the same as today? Answer: That's a no brainer!

CAMBRIDGE COCKTAILS

Chris Lutes and Matthew Curtis, owners of Audubon Circle and Cambridge 1, keep adding to their empire of trendy-yet-casual bar-restaurants. Their newest spot, Middlesex Lounge, opened in early October on Mass. Ave., a few doors down from another bar the pair owns, Miracle of Science. Like the other three, Middlesex is funky, fashionable and fun.

Sparsely decorated, and outfitted with one small bar, high ceilings and low tables that are the same height as the seats, the new lounge-restaurant hybrid is more industrial-chic than Lutes and Curtis' other hangouts. The furniture is modular, meaning the small seats and benches are on wheels (and equipped with brakes), so patrons can create their own seating arrangement. GM Jason Tobin tells us the sliding seats also come in handy when the mood strikes for late-night dancing—they're shoved aside to create a dance floor.

Middlesex's lunch menu (available 11:30 am–2:30 pm) offers pressed sandwiches (like the tasty turkey, bacon and swiss), soups and salads, all priced between $4.50 and $7. In the evening (5 pm–1 am), Middlesex reopens with a focus on the drinks. In addition to wine—by the glass ($6–$15) and by the bottle ($21–$70)—the menu includes a few interesting brews and an array of specialty cocktails. Among them: aged rum punch ($8.50); the Demi-peche (a $5.50 concoction made with peach sirop and Hefeweizen); a Pimms cup with soda and cucumber ($6) and a Dark and Stormy ($6.50). Light bites—small plates meant for sharing—available on the lounge menu include Ten Tiny Tacos ($8), bite-size shells layered with cilantro, jalapeno, avocado and tomato; shrimp shumai in soy sauce ($5); and jerk chicken sticks ($5).

While the funky decor and fun drinks are a draw in themselves, Tobin sees Middlesex's DJs as the main attraction. A laptop DJ provides the music at lunchtime, and at night there's an eclectic mix of vinyl—according to Tobin, everything from "murky thunderclap chop to golden-era hip-hop to rock and funk." 315 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-868-6739). www.middlesexlounge.com. —E.H.

SKY'S THE LIMIT?

The MasterCard commercial where a guy says he'd trade his girlfriend for World Series tickets isn't far from the mark, as it turned out. The bubbly was barely uncorked after ALCS Game 7 when the Red Sox ticket frenzy reached an unheard-of level. Some of the items being offered on Craigslist in exchange for World Series tickets: a year's rent on a one-bedroom apartment in the Back Bay; a slew of cars, from a 1988 Saab convertible to a 1997 Isuzu Trooper; personal chef services; a week's stay at a house in France; laser hair removal services; and of course, sexual favors. But aside from one guy trying to trade his tickets for a boat (which he planned to name "Game 6") most lucky ticket-holders were looking for good, old-fashioned greenbacks—the more the better. Ace Ticket's cheapest grandstand seats started at $1,225 apiece, while StubHub was, for a time, home to possibly the most expensive ticket in baseball history: field box seats for the never-played Game 7, at $15,430. Call it the Curse of Supply and Demandino. —Ezra Dyer

inner view

JOHNNY DAMON

During the past three seasons, Red Sox centerfielder Johnny Damon has become many things to many people in this city. He's inspired a bearded cult following called Damon's Disciples (not to mention the similarly holy slogan WWJDD?—What Would Johnny Damon Do?) and also just finished up what was possibly the most productive season ever for a Red Sox lead-off hitter, registering personal career highs in homers (20), RBIs (94) and walks (76) while finishing second in the American League with 123 runs. But big hits and facial hair aside, Damon also gives a generous chunk of his time to charity. The night after the Sox embarked upon their four-game World Series mangling of the St. Louis Cardinals, we caught up with Damon at the Nike Store on Newbury Street, where he was donating his cleats from ALCS Game 7 to raise funds for Franciscan Children's Hospital.

IB: We see you're auctioning off your cleats from Game 7. Ever think about how much a couple locks of hair from that night might fetch?

JD: We're not too sure because the locks are going to be sticking around for a little while longer. I think it's probably a better choice that we decided to donate the cleats.

IB: Speaking of Game 7, who do you think felt worse after you guys clinched the pennant, Jeter or Nomar?

JD: Definitely Jeter. Nomar actually called and congratulated me and the team. He's really happy about all that we're achieving.

IB: It would have been great to finish the Yankees off at Fenway, but how sweet was it getting to celebrate in Yankee Stadium in front of all their fans?

JD: That was pretty great, but to be honest, I think their fans showed us a lot of respect as the game was winding down. They weren't happy, but they still congratulated us.

IB: What's the craziest thing you've ever had a female fan say or do in your presence?

JD: Wow, the craziest thing was probably the one who came up to me and said that the night before she had made her boyfriend pretend that he was me in bed.

IB: That's intense. Speaking of females, how did you feel about A-Rod's little base-running escapades?

JD: Bronson got slapped pretty good, that's about all I can say.

IB: What do you think the chances of seeing Nelson de la Rosa [Pedro Martinez's good-luck charm] in uniform for the Sox next year? Maybe as a batting tee or Wally's Mini-Me?

JD: [Laughs]. I wouldn't be surprised. It depends on if Pedro is back with us next year again, which we are planning on. But that little guy has brought us some serious luck.

IB: Did you have any idea what you were in for when you signed here a couple of years ago?

JD: I could have never imagined that things would be like this here. I mean I knew that I could come to Boston and get a chance to play for the World Series, but never could have imagined everyone would be this passionate. —Rich Levine

GET SAUCED

That's Saucy... Restaurateurs Joe Arcari and Martin Murphy are at it again. On November 4, the group, which also owns Joshua Tree, Tonic and Boston Beer Garden, is slated to introduce Sauce in Somerville's Davis Square. The wine bar/small plates joint offers a wine list of roughly 50 bottles, a menu of about 25 items (most of which can be enhanced by special sauces) and live music. "People in Davis Square need a place to let their hair down," says manager Rob Ames. "And we'll do that without killing their wallets." 400 Highland Ave., Somerville (617-625-0200).

Getting Fresh... Southie continues to spawn new restaurant offerings with the recently opened Fresh Tortillas on West Broadway. Around the corner on Dorchester Avenue, Salsa's caters to sit-down diners, but Fresh Tortillas takes aim at the takeout crowd looking for a quick Mexican fix. The extra-thick tortillas add a unique tasty element to staples like burritos and fajitas, and the pound of fajita fixings—$13.99 for chicken, slightly more for steak or shrimp—makes a solid meal for two. 475 West Broadway, South Boston (617-269-0061).

Restaurant Year... In the past, we've had to wait for the last week in August to reap the benefits of Boston's Restaurant Week and its special prix fixe menus. Now, we only have to wait until we're hungry. Two local eateries—33 Restaurant and 75 Chestnut—have announced a daily three-course prix fixe dinner mirroring those of Restaurant Week. In addition, UpStairs on the Square is offering a $20 prix fixe lunch Monday–Saturday and a $30 and $40 dinner Monday–Thursday. The menu items will change from time to time, but the prices ($33 for 33 Restaurant and $30 for 75 Chestnut) will stay the same.

Brotherly Love... It's only natural for two brothers to share a little friendly competition. But with their new restaurant at Atelier 505, brothers David and Bob Kinkead take that concept to the next level. At Sibling Rivalry, which opened on October 25, the two created a paired menu that gives diners a choice: Order a dish prepared by Bob—a James Beard Award winner and owner of Kinkead's in Washington D.C.—or a similar item from David, former head chef at Kingfish Hall and former corporate chef for Todd English. It probably won't be an easy decision, but judging by the chefs' credentials, we doubt you'll go home unhappy, or hungry. 505 Tremont St., Boston (617-510-4195).

IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Looking Up...Business is on the rise over at Saint, literally. In early December, the chic nightlife hot spot will expand to two floors. The owners have revamped the empty space above the Exeter Street club to create a brand new, modern Italian restaurant seating 70 (with extra outside seating during the summer). Executive chef Rene Michelena will continue to cook up tapas for the downstairs nightclub but will devote most of his time and energy to the new venture. The name is still being decided, since the one they had in mind was just taken by another restaurant. May we suggest Sinner? 90 Exeter St., Boston (617-236-1134).

A San Francisco Treat...Fresh off his two-year run as DJ at the San Francisco hot spot Zendo, Keven Thibeault is now bringing that laid-back West Coast club atmosphere to the Hub. At the end of October, Thibeault and the crew over at Mantra started Meet Market, a new Wednesday lounge night featuring three king-size lounge beds, and an Indian/French tapas menu that's served until 1 am. The music's played at a reasonable level too, so you can converse without going hoarse. This might be the best concept to come out of San Francisco since Rice-a-Roni. 52 Temple Place, Boston (617-877-6325).

Cheap & Chic...While Bostonians wait and wait for a nearby Ikea outlet, H&M, the other Scandinavian emporium specializing in hip, low-priced stuff, is on the rise. On September 10, H&M opened a new outlet for its hip yet affordable men's and women's clothing and accessories, in the Cambridgeside Galleria. The chain opened its first Boston locale in Downtown Crossing in 2001, and since it's always jam-packed, it's a wonder it's taken nearly three years to open store number two. 100 Cambridgeside Place Cambridge (617-225-0895).

Got What It Takes?...With 21 straight wins (and counting, at press time) the New England Patriots are making this NFL thing look easier than Paris Hilton. Wonder how easy it really is? Through Thanksgiving, Boston Sports Club offers the chance to get a taste of what NFL players go through, with a football-themed workout developed by former New York Jets conditioning coach Joshua Zitomer. On selected Sunday and Monday nights, BSC hosts workouts of catching, throwing and tackling drills designed to simulate an NFL training camp. Visit www.mysportsclubs.com for schedules at participating BSCs, but don't hold your breath for that call from Coach Belichick. (800-301-1231).

Gallery Gals...After 16 years at the helm of two Newbury Street fine art galleries, Susan Lanoue, former director of the now-defunct Dyansen and, more recently, Galerie d'Orsay, has struck out on her own with Lanoue Fine Art, in Harley-Davidson's old Newbury headquarters. Evidently, all that time spent amongst Renoirs and Picassos made Lanoue long to switch gears. "I wanted to work with living artists whose work says something about today's world," she says. Although the art is contemporary, Lanoue isn't a gallery for emerging artists—it specializes in established, midcareer artists. Meanwhile, in Somerville, Heather Somershein, formerly of Chestnut Hill's Wentworth Gallery, also recently opened her own venture. Art Attack opened in late October and specializes in contemporary art, from graffiti to sculpture to lacquered furniture to jewelry. Lanoue Fine Art, 160 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-4400). Art Attack, 108 Beacon St., Somerville (617-441-3833). —E.H., J.I. and R.L.

Storybook Ball 2004, a benefit for MassGeneral Hospital for Children, took place October 16 at the Park Plaza Castle. Guests gathered first at the atrium of the Millennium Building on St. James Street and then made their way to the Castle. More than 600 people attended the fifth annual gala which raised close to $2 million for MassGeneral Hospital for Children's asthma and cystic fibrosis programs for treatment and related research.

1. Actor Chris Cooper and his wife, actress Marianne Leone; Lenny Clarke, comedian/actor star of FX's Rescue Me, and his wife, Jennifer, fishing captain in Martha's Vineyard.
2. Courtney Forrester, director of special events for the Gardner Museum; Michael Rodeno, investment banker for J&K Securities and his wife, Carolyn, owner of the Hey Baby children's clothing line.
3. Rachael Kennedy, store planner for Talbot's in Hingham, and her husband, David, manager at Ernst & Young.
4. Jun Oh, investment analyst for Wellington Management, and his wife, Jay, student at Harvard.
5. Tom Hamilton, Aerosmith bassist, and his wife, Terry.
6. Peggy Henry, wife of Red Sox owner John Henry; Stacey Lucchino, wife of Red Sox president Larry Lucchino; and Shonda Schilling, wife of Red Sox pitcher Curt Schilling.
7. Alex Sugar, investment adviser for Bear Stearns, and his wife, Lauri.

The Pink Ribbon Gala to benefit Winchester Hospital's Breast Care Center took place October 16 at the Boston Park Plaza Hotel. More than 500 friends of the hospital gathered at the fourth annual gala, which raised $200,000 toward the purchase of a digital mammography unit.

8. Sunny Adler and her husband, Jon, doctor at Winchester Hospital; Sherry Laverty, leader at Weight Watchers, and her husband, Steve, former president of Winchester Hospital.
9. Barry McDonough, leasing manager for Cummings Properties in Woburn; his wife, Deb, chair of the gala; and Dale Lodge, president of Winchester Hospital.
10. Lynne Sibo, independent clinical hospital specialist, and Dave Emerson, independent contractor.

ALL SOXED UP

How do you say "Who's your Papi?" in Mandarin?

If you're sick of columns about the Red Sox... I don't care. Give it up, because you can't escape them. (This month in Cosmo: "Eight ways to make your man scream in ecstasy besides a series of historic comeback wins against the Yankees!") As I sit here, with the Sox still soaked in World Series champagne, I feel like I need to smoke opium and watch a three-hour PBS special about the life of the cuttlefish. Anything to calm down.

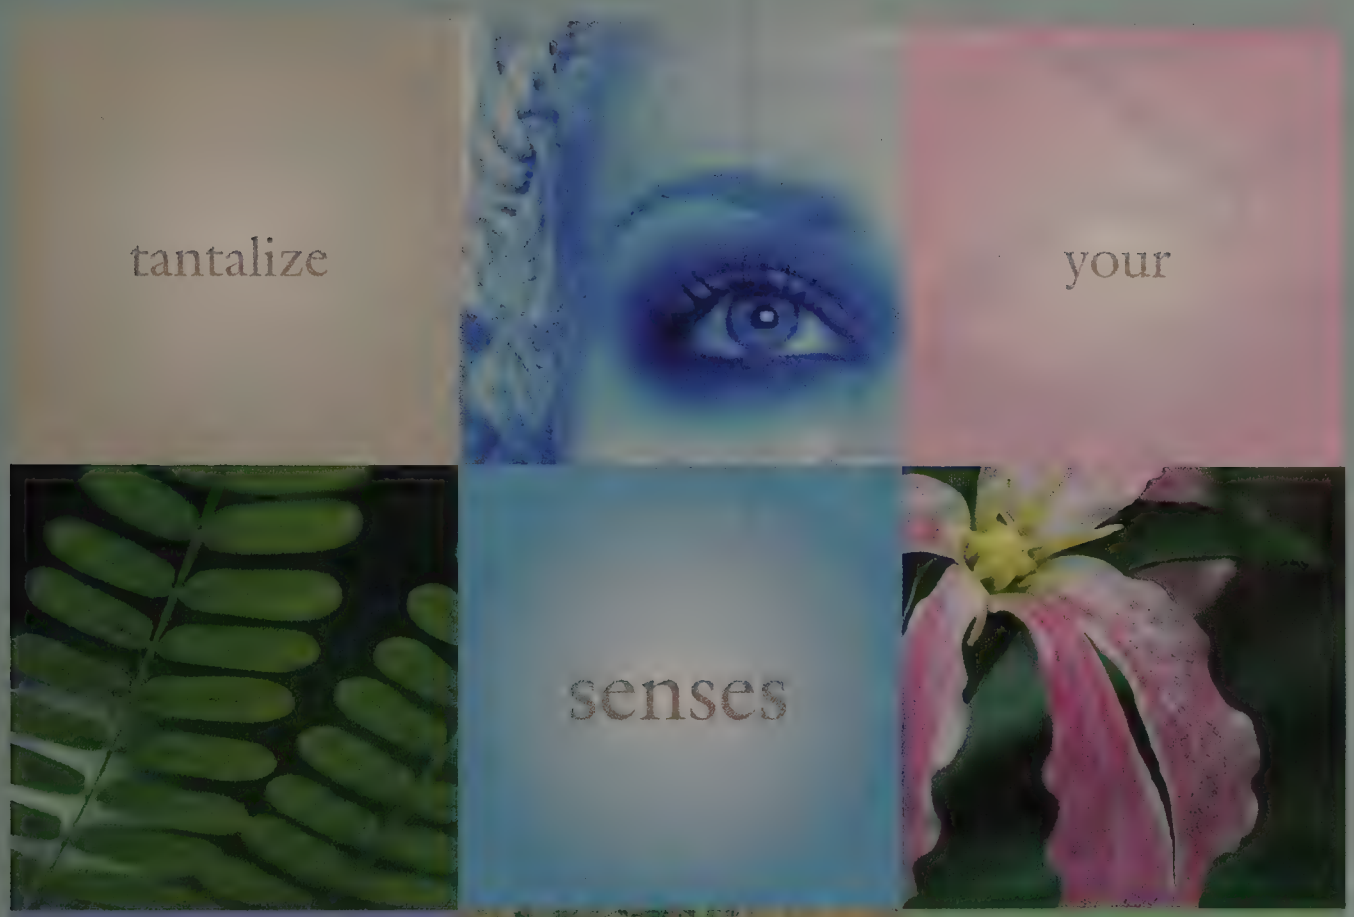
Let me back up a bit: When the series against the Yankees started, I wasn't in the best spot to watch the games. And I'm not talking about a seat at the end of the sectional that's perpendicular to the TV, or the booths directly beneath the plasma screens at Sully O'Smitty's Sports Bah. I'm talking China—Shanghai to be specific. I was in Shanghai for a story on how the Chinese are about to trade their bicycles for cars, thus plunging the world into a massive energy crisis. While all around me I saw evidence of the impending Dark Ages as a result of the Westernization of China, what I didn't see was evidence of anywhere to watch the Sox-Yankees games, and that was even worse. Starbucks didn't have TVs. Neither did McDonald's. And the Hooters around the corner wasn't slated to open for another two weeks. What the hell, Shanghai? If you're going to co-opt a culture, do it all the way.

I bought a coffee at the aforementioned Starbucks and returned to my hotel in the futile hope that the game might be on TV there—after all, I did have ESPN in my room. There was only one problem: ESPN Asia is about as useful as a two-legged tripod. Even if they'd cut a deal with Fox to show the game, they'd certainly delay it to show something more important, like cricket or ping-pong or, as was the case one morning, bass fishing. I imagined a Chinese guy somewhere out in the countryside avidly tuning in to learn the intricacies of trolling near docks. "Ahh!" he'd say, while chowing down on some bird's nest soup, "big fish hide near dock pilings! I'll have to remember that if I ever find myself aboard a bass boat on Wisconsin's Upper Chain Lake." If there's an upside to ESPN Asia's baseball coverage, it's that the Chinese were spared Tim "a walk's as good as a home run" McCarver, whose powers of baseball insight would be rivaled by your average bass.

Thankfully, my hotel had broadband Internet access. Thus I paid $3 on MLB.com and got streaming video of Game 1 live from New York at the entirely inappropriate hour of 7:30 am. Sure, the popup video screen on my laptop was roughly three inches square, but dammit, I was watching baseball!

My efforts didn't pay off quite the way I'd hoped, with the Sox dropping the first game despite a teaser comeback. OK, I told myself, it's just one game. Not a big deal. The next day, I tuned in again, and again the Sox fell flat. I commiserated over e-mail, since I was the only patron in my improvised sports bar. "I know it's the wrong culture," my friend Wilson wrote, "but you might want to think about committing hari kari." I needed a walk after that, so I wandered out to a restaurant and distracted myself by guessing what kinds of meat were in the pictures on the menu. I read an article in the Shanghai Daily about the hairy crab, a local autumn delicacy (Headline: "Grab a hairy crab!") but in the back of my mind I was wondering how they'd react at customs when they asked if

IF THERE'S AN UPSIDE TO ESPN ASIA'S BASEBALL COVERAGE, IT'S THAT THE CHINESE WERE SPARED TIM "A WALK'S AS GOOD AS A HOME RUN" MCCARVER

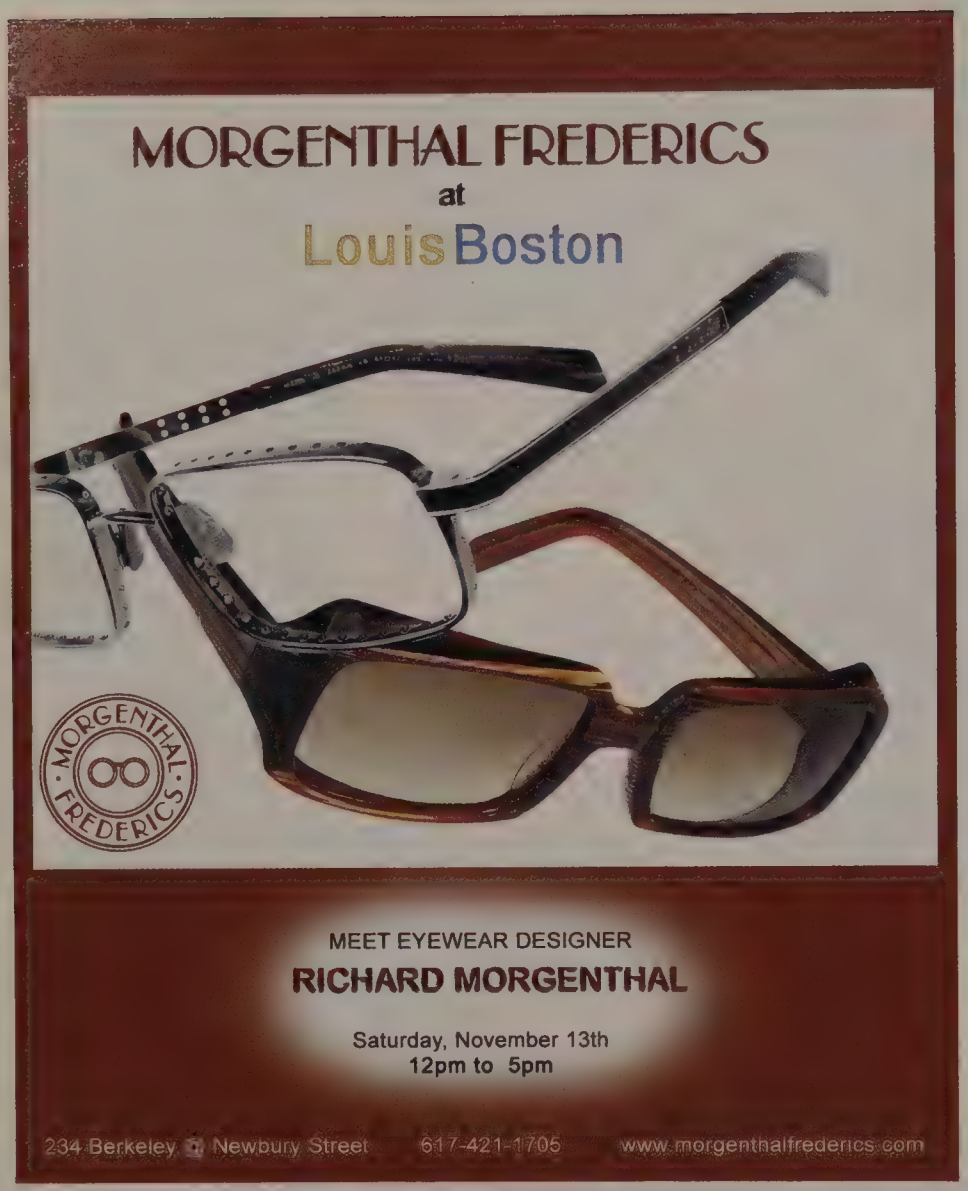


I had anything to declare, and I replied, "Yes. Derek Jeter is a penis."

For Game 3, the good news is that I was back in the States. The bad news is that I was at a wedding on Shelter Island, off Long Island, which meant that I got to watch the worst postseason drubbing in history while surrounded by smug, gloating Yankees fans. I'd traveled a total of 32 hours via bus, plane, car and ferry only to watch the Yankees administer a beating so severe that the Supreme Court nearly stopped the game in the eighth inning for violating the constitutional prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment.

You know how the rest of it turned out. The problem is, I'm a superstitious Red Sox fan, and if something works I've got to repeat it. Assuming the Sox and Yankees meet again in the postseason next year, I've got to figure out how to get back to China so we can start losing. iB

YOU THINK THAT'S FUNNY?



But not a riot, hopefully. E-mail ezra@improper.com.

THE COLLINS CARD

BY CHRIS COLLINS

TWO DAYS WE'LL NEVER FORGET

Pedro was right about his friend David Ortiz... Football players notice this is a baseball town...

Where were you on Monday, October 18, say about 1:23 am? My guess is you know. My guess is you'll never forget. Within a 24-hour window at Fenway Park, David Ortiz became a legend. The already immensely popular slugger not only breathed new life into the "Dead" Sox, but he did it so mightily against the New York Yankees, setting the Sox on course to end 86 years of futility.

Two games, back to back, and two walk-off game-winners. They're stuck in our memory bank forever. No offense, Mayor Menino, but Mr. Ortiz is "the Mayor" of Boston.

Ortiz has without question been Sox general manager Theo Epstein's greatest work. In fact, his signing from the Minnesota bench may be the greatest free agent steal in the team's storied history. They got him for nothing. Think about that—nothing! Apparently we have his Dominican Republic countryman Pedro Martinez to thank. It was he who told Epstein that Ortiz was a can't-miss.

The American League Championship Series has been a troubling experience for the Boston Red Sox in the past. Lots and lots of bad memories. However, there might never be a better two-day stretch in Boston sports history than October 17 and 18.

Ten hours and 52 minutes—but who's counting—was the total duration of those two epic battles. In that time span you could have played four games. Ortiz's heroics actually happened on the same day, as Game 4 ended early Monday morning and Game 5 ended late Monday night.

At the beginning of Game 4 of the ALCS, the Sox were one more miserable loss away from an offseason that would have been ugly beyond belief. But it didn't happen that way. Not even close. After a three-game hiatus against the Yankees, the Red Sox showed heart. And nobody's heart was beating bigger than Ortiz's. Ask yourself, could it have happened to a better guy?

Think about all the whining that has gone on at Yawkey Way the last two years, primarily about contract status or lack of respect. Not one word of it has come from the person most responsible for the team's successes. Ortiz has not only shut his mouth, but he's smiling while doing it.

This guy apparently didn't read the book on Red Sox superstar etiquette. With increased RBIs, batting average and home runs, he's supposed to be ornery. He's supposed to demand a contract renegotiation. He's supposed to bitch about the local radio station. There's none of that with Ortiz.

So how do you not root for him? It's impossible, according to Kevin Millar, who said that Ortiz should hold out in spring training to get Manny Money. He was joking, of course, but that's the point. You can joke about David Ortiz. He's the greatest bargain in baseball, not to mention the most trusted clutch hitter in the game.

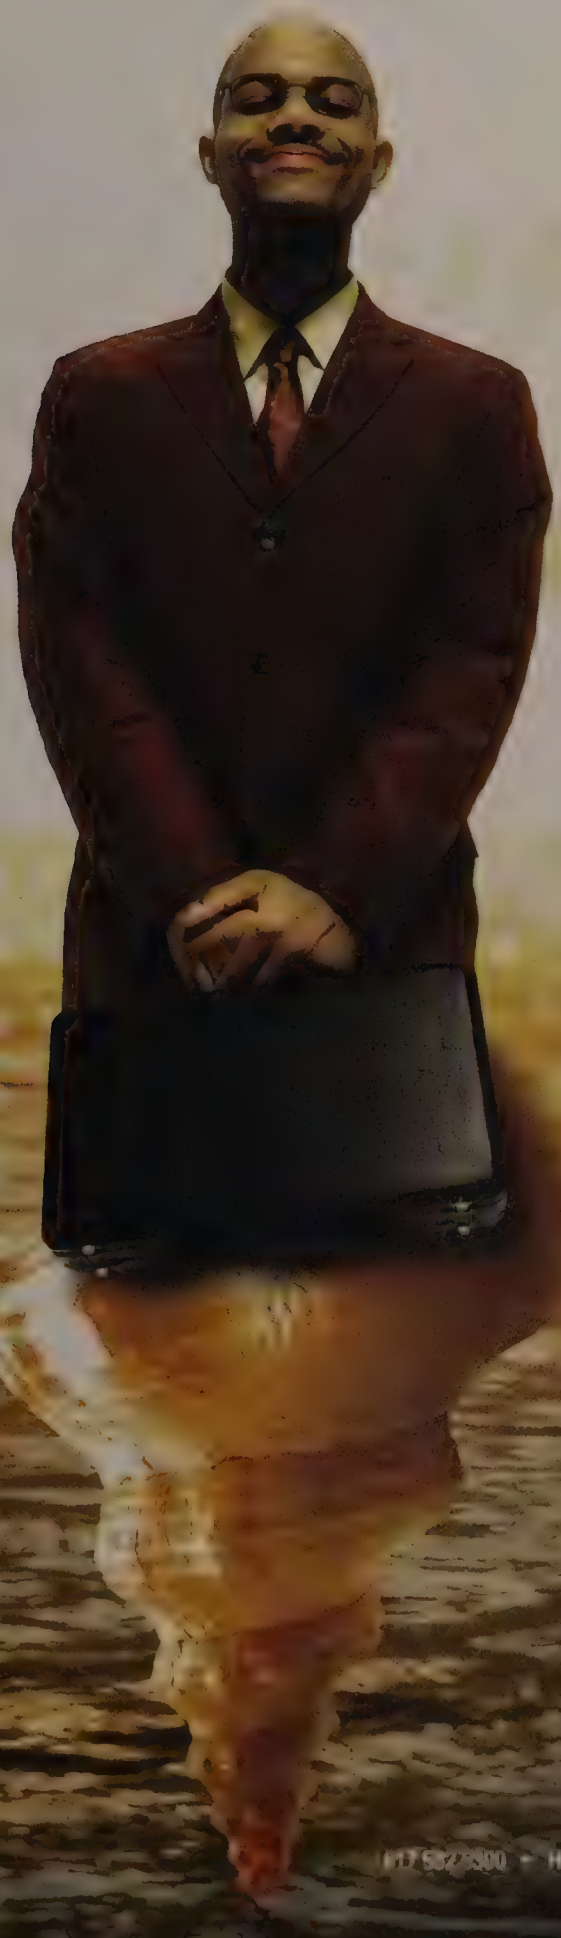
Are the New England Patriots incredible, or what?

Lost in the Red Sox shuffle is one of the other greatest stories in pro sports. The week the Patriots were preparing to break the 18-game winning streak record, linebacker Ted Johnson pulled me aside and played the media for a change. He asked me a question—one that got to the heart of the disparity between football and baseball media coverage:

"How could you guys (in the media) analyze every pitch? How? It's unbelievable how every single pitch is broken down."

> AFTER A THREE-GAME HIATUS AGAINST THE YANKEES, THE RED SOX SHOWED HEART AND NOBODY'S HEART WAS BEATING BIGGER THAN ORTIZ'S

Johnson is right. The fans and the media are nuts when it comes to the Red Sox. Nevertheless, the Patriots—who are the best team this region of the universe has ever seen—continue to go about their business like construction workers. They wake up, punch in, do their job and go home. On Sundays, they wake up, go to work, do their job, win, and then go home.



It makes me wonder how this team would be treated by the media and fans if it were in Dallas, Pittsburgh or Cleveland. My guess is that they would have named a sandwich after Bill Belichick (the "Belichicken Sandwich") and Tom Brady would be in hiding like Elvis Presley.

But here in New England, they're just winners. iB

Soroff ON

KEN BURNS

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Award-winning documentarian Ken Burns was born in New York and raised primarily in Delaware and Michigan. After graduating from Hampshire College in Amherst in 1975, he became one of the founders of Florentine Films. In 1981, his first major project, Brooklyn Bridge, earned him an Academy Award nomination, and he has since gone on to make such landmark films and television series as Baseball, The Civil War, Jazz, Frank Lloyd Wright, The West, Thomas Jefferson, Mark Twain and Lindbergh. In addition to the Oscar nod, his accolades include two Emmys, two Grammys, a Peabody award, a Guggenheim fellowship and numerous honorary degrees. On November 8th, the Boston Center for Adult Education will present him with the American Journey Award for Artistic Achievement at a reception to be held at Fenway Park. He lives in Walpole, N.H.

Jonathan Soroff: Baseball was the highest rated show in PBS history…

Ken Burns: Actually, no. There's a strange distinction that neither we nor PBS should really worry about, but The Civil War was the highest rated in terms of ratings points, while Baseball was the most watched, as in the greatest number of people saw it. I'll leave you and your editor to fuss over that distinction.

JS: So what does that say about American tastes?

KB: Well, what makes baseball appealing to people is the intersection between metaphor—why we stay up late to watch the Red Sox—and fact: the statistics, the accumulated record of the game. For me, it's one of the more phenomenal intersections of humankind.

JS: Would you call yourself a fact junkie?

KB: That's a good question. Yeah. I think I soak up a lot of stuff. I do The New York Times crossword puzzle in ink every single day, seven days a week, 365 days a year. I can't go to bed until I've done it.

JS: Are documentaries an attempt to pin their subjects down?

KB: No, let's put to bed once and for all the idea that documentaries are objective. They're as subjective as feature films. I tell narratives that are based in fact, as opposed to fictional stories, but it's still an interpretation of the facts, which can be more truthful than the mere recitation of them.

JS: What character trait of yours most informs your films?

KB: Doggedness.

JS: How do you choose your topics, or do they choose you?

KB: They choose me. I get possessed by a subject. I hear about someone like Jack Johnson [the first black heavyweight boxing champion], and I spent 10 years absolutely driven to do a film about him, which I just finished. It's called Unforgivable Blackness: The Rise and Fall of Jack Johnson. It'll be on in January.

LET'S PUT TO BED ONCE AND FOR ALL THE IDEA THAT DOCUMENTARIES ARE OBJECTIVE. THEY'RE AS SUBJECTIVE AS FEATURE FILMS.

JS: Of all the big film festivals—Sundance, Toronto, Telluride—which do you like best?

KB: Maybe Telluride. Sundance is a horrendous place. It's not about film. It's about deals and meetings and parties and sightings. What makes Telluride and the New York Film Festival so exciting is that they're about the films.

JS: When you go to the movies, are you more likely to see a documentary or a feature?

KB: A feature. It's thrilling that the options now include a lot more documentaries, which I do go and see, but I'm as interested in the dramatic film as I am in documentaries, even though that's my chosen field.

JS: Any chance you'll ever make a feature film?

KB: Probably not. It's very important to understand—and this happened to me after Civil War, when I'd been working 15 years making documentaries—suddenly people assumed that because I'd had success with a documentary, that meant it was the lower rung on a career ladder that I wanted to climb up. I said, 'No.' This is what I always wanted to do. I'm also in the wonderful position that if you don't like one of my films, it's all my fault. In the feature world, you can't say that. With documentaries, I have all the control.

JS: Biggest mistake you ever made in a film?

KB: Good question. I think it may have been in taking myself too seriously. In Baseball, there are places where I took the drama of the game a little too seriously, so that it had the same sort of narrative rhythm as The Civil War, and of course, you can't really compare the closest we've ever come to national suicide with, say, the ball going through Buckner's legs [laughs]. Although it's almost as close, make no mistake.

JS: Historical event you wish you'd witnessed?

KB: You don't have room in your column. I would've loved to see Pickett's charge at Gettysburg, or the day before, when the 20th Maine executed this obscure textbook maneuver that saved the Union Army and maybe even the Union itself. I would've loved to have known whether Thomas Jefferson and Sally Hemings had real affection, or whether this was just yet another power trip. I would have liked to be at the opening of the Brooklyn Bridge, or to live, for about a week, in a celibate Shaker village. I'd love to have heard Huey Long deliver a speech. I'd like to have met Jackie Robinson. But more than anything else, I would've loved to have known Louis Armstrong.

JS: Do you care about awards?

KB: On my refrigerator, I have a New Yorker cartoon. It's two guys standing around in Hell, and the caption says, "Apparently, my over 200 screen credits don't mean a damn thing." That sort of puts it in perspective.

JS: Is there a subject you'd never touch?

KB: Not in American history.

JS: Michael Moore: agent provocateur or brilliant truth-teller?

KB: He's both those things and more. He's got a kind of shotgun approach to filmmaking. The principle of a shotgun is you don't require all the pellets to necessarily hit.

JS: You've been called one of the most influential documentary filmmakers of all time. What one thing would you most like to influence?

KB: Well, I've been passionately interested in the question of race in America. I don't think you can deal with American history without coming to terms with the monumental hypocrisy born at our inception. That a man who wrote, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal" owned more than 200 human beings when he wrote that. I would hope that I could continue, as I tried to in Civil War and Baseball and Jazz, and most recently with Unforgivable Blackness, to keep the question open. I don't think it's done.

JS: Part of the filmmaking process you enjoy the most?

KB: There are three. One is getting up at 4 am and capturing the beautiful shot, the physical task of that. The second is the moment in editing when it comes together. All of this collected beautiful stuff means nothing unless you can figure out how to tell a story by arranging it, and there's this great sense of the alchemy of it all. And third, the evangelical part. The describing it, talking about it and sharing it.

JS: One part of your life you'd never want to see on film?

KB: I certainly wouldn't want my sex life on film. I consider that very private. There are a lot of private areas of my life, as a matter of fact, that I'm not sure would be appropriate fodder for film.

JS: OK, fill in the blank. Ken Burns is 100 percent sure that _____

KB: The sun'll come up tomorrow [laughs.] iB

JULIANNE NICHOLSON IS ON THE BRINK OF STARDOM

Amethyst silk chiffon dart dress with satin details, $3,900 at Gucci. South sea pearl, willow bark and citrine quartz necklace by Simon Alcantara, $3,080 at Persona Jewelry Plus.

When I first saw actress Julianne Nicholson, 28 years old at the time, sporting a crewcut in 1999's The Love Letter, I expected that the Medford-raised redhead would become a superstar in a New York minute. It turns out it's taken a little longer than that. Nicholson showed up on Ally McBeal in 2001, right when things were winding down for the show. Though her time on Ally was brief (about a year), the role of attorney Jenny Shaw put Nicholson on the map. Recently, she got a lot of attention for her on-screen energy when she appeared in Little Black Book.

Waiting for Nicholson to arrive at the photo shoot, I half expect her to be tired, and eager to get it over with quickly. "Julianne is filming a movie right now," her manager had told me. "She only has one day off. She may need that time to do something silly like sleep." Nicholson is currently shooting an indie film, Flannel Pajamas, with Emmy-nominated actor Justin Kirk. But as it turns out, she wants to do the shoot because she loves Boston.

When Nicholson arrives, she doesn't look or act like a grouchy actress. Instead, she's a breath of fresh air, her freckled face clean, without a bit of makeup, and her wavy, reddish-brown hair softly brushing her shoulders. She stands taller than I expect, at 5'10", and her frame is thin and delicate. She flashes a smile and introduces herself.

As we shoot, every outfit fits as if it were made for her, and she tells me about her days as a model. She always dreamed of acting, she says, but shied away from it because she was intimidated and didn't know where to begin. While modeling during her teenage years, however, Nicholson took a trip to New York and decided she wanted to move there. A few years later, she did just that, working as a waitress to make ends meet. When she was 24, she began taking acting classes. "When I started acting," she says, "I gave myself five years to pursue it before making a decision to either give up or continue."

Nicholson clearly knows what she's doing when she steps in front of the camera, moving fluidly and turning on the charm. She makes fun of herself and asks questions about everyone in the room. During makeup and hair changes, she tells me about her wedding to actor Jonathan Cake, which took place in Italy two weeks earlier, and whips out photographs. She beams as she talks about her new husband. "I used to always hear people say that you just know when you've found the one," she says, "and it used to really piss me off because I thought it was untrue. When I met Jonathan, it all made sense."

Nicholson doesn't seem obsessed with becoming the next It Girl or a major icon. She speaks about her career with a mixture of pride and humility. "I love what I do," she says. "I feel really lucky to have come as far as I have in my career, but there's still more that I want to do." After all, she's just a girl from Medford who happened to New York, and who happens to be on her way to the top.

WHO IS SŌNA MED SPA?

Welcome to Sōna Med Spa, the nation's leading provider of laser hair removal and skin rejuvenation. A favorite of both men and women throughout the U.S., Sōna Med Spa is pleased to announce its newest location in Burlington, MA. Thanks to our qualified medical staff and state-of-the-art equipment, you can remove unwanted facial and body hair once and for all without ever having to shave, wax, or tweeze again. Unlike other laser treatment centers, Sōna offers a unique spa experience called the Sōna Concept™ that includes:

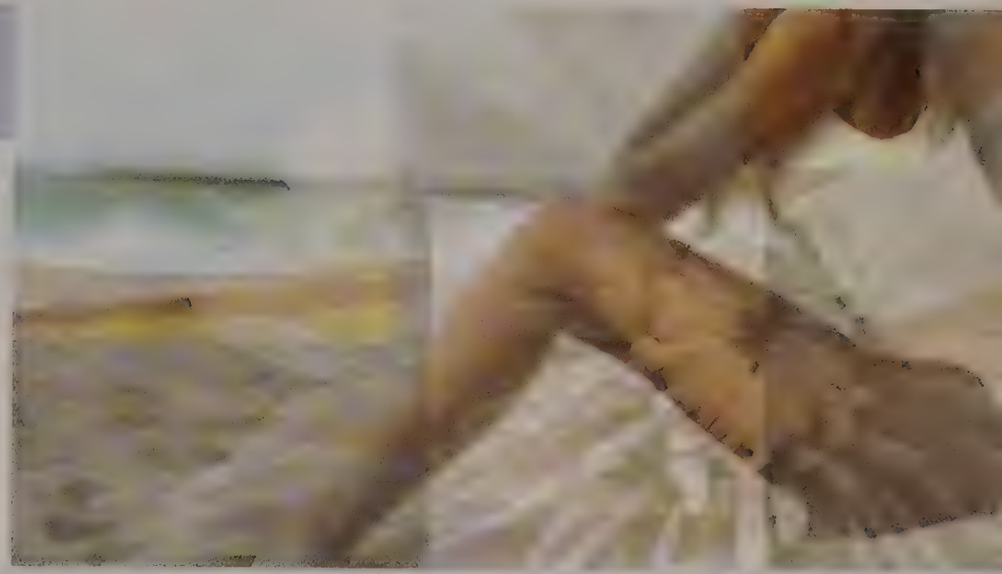
- A private consultation to discuss your personal needs
- A private room, robe, and slippers for your comfort
- Licensed nurses to perform all procedures
- Supervision by our very own Medical Director for your peace of mind
- A friendly environment that is both discreet and comfortable

HOW SŌNA LASER HAIR REMOVAL WORKS

A concentrated beam of laser light is flashed on the skin and absorbed by the follicle, disrupting its ability to produce hair. While some lasers are only effective on certain types of hair, Sōna's laser hair removal is more effective for all hair types, from the lightest to the darkest.



Compared to more traditional methods of hair removal, like electrolysis or waxing, laser hair removal is described by our clients as a welcome alternative. During the hair removal procedure, Sōna's calming skin cooler, Smart Cool™, blows a continuous stream of cool air on your skin. For those with very sensitive skin, our exclusive topical anesthetic, Sōnacaine™, is also available to alleviate any discomfort. The entire procedure is non-invasive—there is little to no downtime. You can be in and out in as little as 30 minutes.

SŌNA

There are numerous benefits of Sōna's laser hair removal procedures compared to other treatment centers:

- The Sōna Concept™ is approved by the FDA as effective for permanent hair reduction.
- Through a special partnership with laser manufacturers, Sōna is equipped with the very latest laser technology in the industry.
- Office visits are brief.

Call 1-800-SONA-NOW today for a private tour and consultation. Or visit us online at www.sona-boston.com to learn more about Sōna Med Spa's laser hair removal and skin rejuvenation services. You have a lot to lose, like embarrassing hair, short-lived results, and a lifetime of shaving, waxing, or tweezing.

SŌNA'S NEWEST ADDITION – SKIN REJUVENATION

Tanning beds, harsh makeup and invasive cosmetic fads have all taken their toll on our skin. Sōna's Skin Rejuvenation specialties revitalize healthy, youthful-looking skin in a safe and convenient way, without needles, painful injections, or abrasive chemicals, with this four-step process:

1. Evaluate any areas of concern–wrinkles, sun damage, enlarged pores, uneven skin tone, and bacteria–on and below the surface of the skin using advanced skin imaging systems.
2. Repair damage based on your individual results utilizing a personalized treatment schedule.
3. Replenish the texture and overall quality of your skin with Sōna laser treatments, which activates your skin's natural collagen reproduction system.
4. Maintain your results indefinitely with follow-up evaluations and full color photos of the ongoing improvements happening on and below your skin's surface.

WINTER WOW!

BY SAMANTHA HOUSE

BRIAN SILVERSTEIN; EARRINGS AVAILABLE AT INTERMIX

This season, eyes are swept with a light, shimmery shadow. Define them with plum eyeliner, instead of brown or black, for a softer look, and finish with two coats of plum mascara. Try BeComing Multi-look Eye and Face Shimmer in Patina Pink ($12 at www.becoming.com) all over the eyes for natural-looking shimmer. Nars eyeliner in Bamako ($18 at Neiman Marcus) and Bourjois Pump up the Volume mascara in Violet Tutu vu 24 ($13 at Sephora) work perfectly together. Cheeks should have a slight cherry color with just a hint of brown for a wind-burnt appearance. My favorite blush for all skin tones is Sin by Nars ($22.50 at Neiman Marcus). Lips, the final step and the most dramatic element of this look, are well-lined and dark. Choose either a dark plum or a dark brown lipstick, in either matte or glossy, layered over a coordinating lipliner. Both MAC and Giorgio Armani have excellent selections. —Samantha House

BEAUTY AND THE BEST: TRISH MCEVOY

Cosmetics queen Trish McEvoy got her start working as a New York makeup artist in the mid 1970s. Disappointed with the quality of makeup brushes on the market, she decided to create her own. Since then, McEvoy's beautiful brushes have become an industry staple and gained a reputation as the best that money can buy. But she didn't stop there. Over the years, McEvoy has expanded her line to include makeup, skin care products, fragrances, and her newest addition, candles, and she continues to work constantly to come up with innovative ideas to keep her clients happy. At a recent appearance at Neiman Marcus, she gave out hugs and honest opinions to everyone who crossed her path. Here's what she had to say to the IMPROPER.

What's your best-selling product?
My Even Skin beta hydroxy pads ($58 at Neiman Marcus). They exfoliate and even out skin tone to give the skin a wonderful surface for makeup. I also love the planner [a zippered case that holds makeup and brushes]—it's compact and keeps you organized.

What's the one product that everyone needs?
Powder is the greatest product because it erases things. If you put on too much blush, it covers it just enough. But there really isn't any one product for everyone. Each person has her own personal needs.

Who is your muse? Who inspires you?
My clients are my muses. Each one inspires me. There are younger women, older women, all with varying personal styles. I love all of them.

What's the hottest trend right now?
The one big trend is a very '50s style, which means a more pronounced lip and a lot of eyeliner. The hot eye color is definitely aubergine.

What current makeup trend do you dislike?
I don't dislike trends. Makeup, like fashion, is all about self-expression. Even dark lip-liner and light lips looks great on some people.

How do you decide what your new products will be?
I have my finger on the pulse of the times. Everything around me influences what I come out with. I take it all from life—politics to fashion to music.

What do you think are the most impressive advances in beauty over the past decade?
For skin care I would say AHAs [alpha hydroxy acids]. For makeup, I would say the items that truly mimic skin's texture.

What drugstore product do you love?
I love Wet 'n' Wild #666 lip pencil and, of course, Altoids!

What makeup trick would you like to share with our readers?
Brush face powder over your lips before applying lipstick, to keep it on much longer.

Is there a product you feel is perfect for Bostonians?
It gets very cold here, so Bostonians need to protect their skin. My vitamin C cream does just that.

COLLEGE CONVERSATIONS, LESS DIFFICULT

Author Douglas Stone and Harvard law student Elizabeth Tippett have written Real College, a book of advice that could apply to real life too.

If someone you know is heading into that exhilarating, terrifying maw of college, point his or her apprehensions toward this consoling book. The authors, both of Harvard Law School where Stone is a lecturer and Tippett a student, have advised and mediated at colleges. They use imaginary students—emailing and nail-biting, slangy and appealing—to illustrate the myriad misunderstandings that beset students. Echoing the useful approach of Difficult Conversations (a 2000 best seller co-authored by Stone), the authors break down the various meanings that even a straightforward-seeming statement can include. A student and professor trying to understand each other beyond simple assumptions and defenses could profit from the way Tippett/Stone drill helpful and less helpful ways of approaching sensitive matters into the reader's head. Relations to parents, now on new footing (though real and symbolic laundry are still brought home), roommate politics, term paper timeliness ("Get panicked early!" they advise procrastinators) and sex, including coming out, are all covered. Wise without being hierarchical, the authors invite the student to employ his or her own wisdom regarding drinking, studying and not being a jerk.

Big Sticks Golf Academy, at 115 Cummings Park, Woburn, offers indoor computerized help for your golf game. Memberships, pay-as-you-go options, and even golf parties are available. Call 781-933-6744 or visit www.bigstickgolf.com.

That subtly choreographed, hip-wiggling, briskly whipping action that constitutes the golf swing has happy home at Big Sticks Golf Academy. In one golf bay, the Astar golf video-learning system, all bi mechanics and instant visualization, converts the essential dimensions of your body into crayone "stickman" lines. This virtual version of yourself gets superimposed upon the likes of Tiger, Vijay or or of 198 other pro golfers, and your swing is recorded on a video loop, so you can compare the precise a tions of the real pro golfer with the stick-figure you side-by-side to calibrate your own performanc Next, you can walk right over to Pebble Beach, whose course is projected gigantically on the wall (th same stroll takes you to Scotland's St. Andrews) and thwock the ball against the picture. Althoug there is a real hole for your ball a few feet before you, the screen renders it in big-picture form and le you know where on those famous greenswards your ball would have landed. You're also treated to an i stant report of the distance, in yards, between your ball and the flag and other landmarks. Another ci ematic marvel lets you golf on the edge of the Grand Canyon.

THE FRESHEST GAME IN TOWN

Like Mayflower Poultry Co.'s sign says, it's Fresh Killed. The store offers all sorts of chicken items, some frozen fancy poultry, and fresh turkeys at Thanksgiving. At 621 Cambridge St., Cambridge. Call 617-547-9191.

With its arrestingly candid logo showing the ill-fated bird of choice—the chicken—in flight, Mayflower Poultry Co. is a fixture in East Cambridge. But before you buy, cook and eat these wares, broil up some "tray pack" supermarket chicken and do a side-by-side taste test. Mayflower's soft, young chicken, packed on its little mountain of moisture-retaining ice—noticeably freshissimo!—will win out. Chicken breasts, fingers, and the fowl used for soups and stews (ironically, toughness is a virtue in this case) are the mainstays here. Outrageously fresh chicken livers can provide a meal for two for about one buck. And those piquant particulars—hearts and gizzards—that adventuresome cooks use are also for sale. The more exotic sidekicks of chicken—pheasant, partridge, goose, quail, Cornish game hens, guinea fowl and poussin—come mostly frozen, alongside goats and even sirloin tips that never flew an inch. With a flavorful, old-fashioned, ethnic-neighborhood atmosphere, and lots of friendly joking, it's fun to shop here. Get acquainted with their chicken now, and come Thanksgiving, your raised standards will require you to order here.

REVIEW

NO CLOWNING AROUND

Pierrot brings top-notch French cuisine to Beacon Hill.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

A new ambassador of French culture and cuisine has arrived in Boston: Pierrot Bistrot Francais, named for the white-faced clown of French children's lore. Framed posters of this melancholy, mischievous comic icon in his signature black skullcap and ruffled collar, his loose-fitting costume draping his lanky body, festoon the walls of this engaging bistro, signaling a lighthearted yet earnestly authentic French eatery that brings first-rate food at reasonable prices to Boston's West End.

Located on Cambridge Street at the bottom of Beacon Hill, Pierrot seats almost 40 diners at small tables and booths set with crisp white napery, oversized wineglasses and elegant plates. The room is appointed in exposed brick, wood paneling below wainscoting and burnt sienna paint, and lantern sconces. French recorded music—including songs from soulful chanteuse Edith Piaf—augment its Gallic ambience, while a sonorous grandfather clock adds pleasant but muted chimes on the hour.

Hard-crusted ficelles (the French word means "pieces of string", which well describes these slender loaves) and small spheres of softened butter, served from a silver basket, helped keep our appetite at bay as we perused the inviting menu. Bistro favorites like escargots Bourguignonne ($7.95), lobster bisque ($6.95) and French onion gratiné ($6.25) struck a predictably familiar, but nonetheless satisfying note. Expertly rendered, with fresh, first-rate ingredients, these classics evidenced skill and sound culinary instinct in the kitchen. The half dozen plump, tender snails arrived in an oven-hot ceramic ramekin with individual wells in which the snails swam in garlic butter flecked with chopped parsley and a touch, perhaps, of Pernod. The bisque turned out to be one of the most splendid exemplars of this dish I have enjoyed in some time, light yet intense in flavor, with a generous supply of sweet lobster morsels, its broth made elegant by a splash of Cognac. The onion soup profited from a profoundly flavorful beef stock, plentiful onions and a crouton swaddled in melted cheese.

A more upscale first course, the Napoleon de foie gras et pain d'epice ($11.95), brought layers of foie gras alternating with slices of poached apples, a tower of tantalizing tastes, with the sweet tang of the apple providing a welcome counterpoint to the richness of the fatty liver.

Finally, most provocative among the starters—but not as provocative as the tripe à la mode de Caen offered as a main course—the salade de pieds de cochon (pig's feet salad, $6.95) hit a home run. The rich, boneless meat, sautéed gently in olive oil, accompanied buttery Bibb lettuce, grape tomatoes and a well-constructed vinaigrette redolent of shallots.

Main courses covered all the bases. Confit de canard aux choux rouge ($16.75), preserved duck with red cabbage, delighted with its pleasantly salty skin and succulent, fork-tender flesh. The garnish of a broiled half tomato topped with bread crumbs and al dente zucchini and broccoli nicely complemented the rich, full flavored duck. Tranche de gigot grillé à la crème d'ail ($16.75), a substantial, thick slab of tender, robustly flavored lamb cut from the leg arrived a perfect shade of pink, juicy and succulent, accompanied by a light garlic cream sauce. The accompanying carrots, onions, turnips and broccoli, together with a stack of thin-sliced potatoes Lyonnaise (sautéed with butter and onions) made this a hearty dish. Grilled tuna steak was cut thin but retained a decent texture thanks to careful, brief searing on the outside, which also gave it a pleasant, caramelized finish.

Boeuf bourguignonne ($14.75) is one of the most well known of classic French bistro dishes. Beef stewed in red wine with mushrooms and onions at its best is a beef stew made in heaven. Pierrot's beef Burgundy, full of potential, nevertheless missed its mark. The problem may have been that we arrived so early in the evening that this dish—which requires slow cooking in the oven to tenderize the beef, exchange flavors with the accompanying vegetables and herbs, and develop a rich, hearty sauce—had not had time to do its work. As a result, although the flavors and potential were there, the beef was tough and the dish disappointed.

The kitchen redeemed itself with dessert. Profiteroles au chocolat ($7.95), three tennis ball–size pastry puffs filled with vanilla ice cream and drizzled with bittersweet chocolate sauce, proved a worthy exemplar of this bistro favorite. Crème brûlée ($6.95), with a crisp, caramelized surface, was creamy and mellow within. Finally, a strawberry tart ($5.95) contained firm, fresh, sweet-tart strawberries; mellow, soothing pastry cream and tender pastry. The tart was served too cold—apparently directly from the refrigerator—on our first visit, but at appropriate room temperature on our return.

Service at Pierrot did justice to its French atmosphere and aspirations. The host, a congenial young Breton, set a tone that transported us from Cambridge Street to the Boulevard St. Germain. Jacky Robert, former chef at Maison Robert and cion of that accomplished culinary family, presides over the kitchen with precision and flair.

Pierrot has assembled a respectable wine list, but unfortunately, its alcoholic beverage license had not yet issued when I visited. However, my review of the list revealed that Pierrot plans to offer some of the most remarkable wine bargains in town, with far lower markups than many area restaurants impose. Wine by the glass will also be available, with prices set to range from $5.25 to $8 (excluding the $4.75 white zinfandel, which really doesn't belong on the list, and the $12 Roederer Champagne). It appears that Pierrot plans to resist the temptation to subsidize its reasonably priced food—its $26.95 three-course dinner is by far the best deal in town—through excessive wine prices, recognizing that wine is part of a good meal, not a luxurious add-on.

Although Pierrot is named for a clown, there's nothing frivolous about its performance as a serious restaurant. A reasonable walk from the Financial District, it serves lunch five days a week. Drawing people in the evening will be more of a challenge, since Cambridge Street is not an obvious destination for evening diners. But on the other hand, the restaurant's location near Beacon Hill—a notorious bastion of Francophiles—should make this spot a success. iB

Club Steak

Chestnut thrill...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Jeff Fournier heads the Metropolitan Club kitchen.

Even under construction, the Metropolitan Club makes an impression as a really big deal. The site of the former Figs in Chestnut Hill has been reconfigured to accommodate a copper-topped turret above a corner entrance through which diners will enter what owner Kathy Trustman terms a "modern steakhouse." But wait—there's more. An elegant lounge/waiting area. Private dining rooms. A bar space where well-heeled neighbors can drop by for a burger or a sandwich. Price points generally lower than the Capital Grille that's just a half mile or so down the street. Plus—drum roll here—a culinary combo who could create a destination diner's dream. When the Metropolitan Club opens in late November, Jeff Fournier, fresh from making a splash as chef at Sophia's, will head the kitchen as executive chef. And Paige Retus, who spent six years as Olives' pastry chef and co-wrote The Olives Dessert Table with Todd English, will be (of course) the pastry chef. In addition to dinner and a bar menu, The Metro Club will serve weekend brunch, and the kitchen will be open till midnight.

SECOND COURSE

Speaking of sweets, pastry chef Lee Napoli has exchanged one pair of jobs—at Sandrine's and Dedo—for another twofer. In addition to running her burgeoning one-woman custom-chocolates business, Napoli is now officially pastry chef at Umbria and Bricco, and she's thrilled with her new professional digs. After one taste of her chestnut semifreddo with bitter orange sauce, it's a surprise to find that Napoli hasn't made Italian desserts before. And after one bite of the truffle gelato created by the former pastry chef—that's truffle as in the fungus, not the eponymous chocolate—it's sheer joy to sample a few crunchy biscotti and a wedge of chocolate-hazelnut torte.

Around the corner from Umbria, on Broad Street, the newly opened Pizza Oggi—the sister restaurant of chef Steve Welch's Italian trattoria in Jamaica Plain—is specializing in pizza, pasta and sandwiches for takeout, for lunch and dinner.

The new executive chef at Bambara in Cambridge has hit the ground running, with three new menus: lunch, dinner, and late night. Michael Haimowitz, formerly of Morrells in New York City, is serving up such seasonal fare as autumn mushroom chowder with roasted fingerlings, parsnips, and lardons, and grilled Bobo Farms poussin with fall squash hash, sweet and sour shallots, and toasted pumpkin seed oil. Haimowitz also plans to offer a series of wine dinners; stay tuned.

Happy 10th anniversary to Sonsie chef Bill Poirier, who recently introduced his 40th seasonal menu at the Newbury Street eatery. And happy 10th birthday to Rialto in Cambridge.

There are chains, and then there are chains. You know the difference between a gold-plated necklace and its solid 18 karat counterpart. Let's also consider the gulf between, say, Applebee's and McCormick & Schmick's. One is the kind of eatery that makes "chain" such a pejorative term. The other provides probably your only opportunity in Boston to sample West Coast seafood such as plump, sweet, Penn Cove mussels and big, tender weathervane scallops from Alaska. If you're sneering at the value of an Alaskan import, note that Curt Schilling was born in Anchorage. Note also that McCormick & Schmick's is planning to offer a series of West Coast wine dinners. We'll keep you posted. iB

WINE

Prosecco's Pleasures

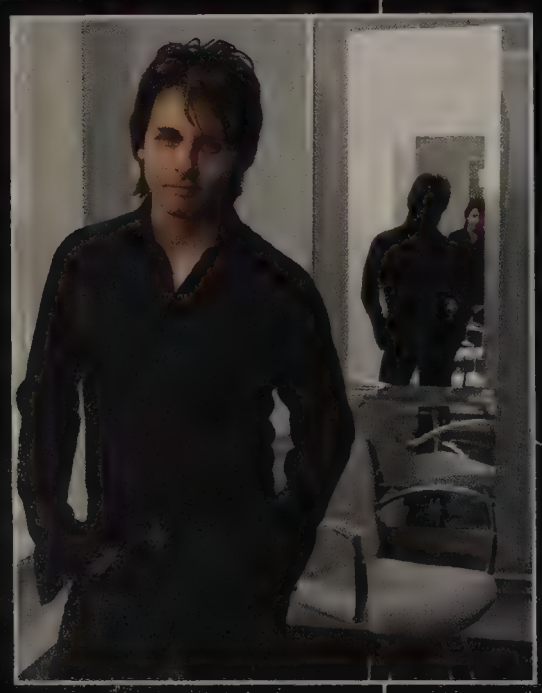
BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

In the world of wine, as in haute couture and fine dining, Italy remains ultrafashionable. We've learned to associate quality, elegance and stylish packaging with the country's image. So while Italy is by far the largest exporter of commercial-grade wines to the U.S., it also supplies us with many of the hottest wine categories every year. The prevalence of Italian restaurants virtually guarantees a ready-made market here for any bottles from Italy that are new and interesting, but some have inevitably taken off better than others. One of these is Prosecco, which in the last few years has risen from obscurity to become extremely popular. It's a fun wine that has been produced without fanfare for years in northeast Italy's Veneto region.

Prosecco is actually a grape variety native to the area, but the name most often appears on bottles of fruity sparkling, or semisparkling, wine. These are made differently than Champagne and other traditional-method sparkling wines in the sense that Prosecco doesn't undergo a lengthy fermentation inside the bottle you buy, and there's no need to age it. In fact, it doesn't improve at all after being bottled. Fermented in pressurized tanks, like most of the world's sparkling wines, it's a mild, fragrantly fruity wine designed to drink fresh, shortly after purchase, and its flavors are closer to their grape origins. But the most important difference is that Prosecco is ideal for enjoying in casual settings with food, rather than as a beverage of celebration or a connoisseur's drink. The wine's moderate price tag (generally from $8 to $12) reflects its informality.

The Prosecco grape is marked by its slightly bitter-flavored finish, which is ideal for service as an aperitif. Most Proseccos you'll encounter are semi-dry, meaning you'll taste not only peachy, flowery-accented flavors but also a bit of sugar. The wine's nowhere near as aromatic or as sweet, however, as Italy's best-known sparkling wine export, Asti. Therefore it's more acceptable to those who prefer drinking drier wines, regardless of whether they have bubbles. Aside from its less overt sweetness, Prosecco is also usually a bit fuller in body than Asti, averaging about 11 percent alcohol, so it's adaptable to a wider range of foods. To me Prosecco is delicious with slightly salty appetizers, and I've also enjoyed drinking it with cured meats, salads, and cheeses of all kinds.

Of the two predominant Prosecco styles, the milder, more adaptable and easier-drinking is the Prosecco frizzante, named as such because it has fewer bubbles. This lightly carbonated version generally has a soft creaminess that comes across on your palate somewhere between bubbly and still. Prosecco spumante is fully sparkling. It often tastes a bit less sweet because the higher degree of carbonation tends to counterbalance whatever sugar is present. To be more precise in helping you find the type of Prosecco that you want, most labels also indicate either brut (relatively, although never absolutely dry), extra dry (the traditional and most prevalent style; confusingly enough, it indicates the wine is partly sweet), dry (which in the bizzaro language of wine labeling means fully sweet) or dulce (very sweet).



Some Proseccos are produced at the DOC level, which indicates the wine is made from precise grape varieties from specific production zones within the eastern Veneto. Although it's a higher quality classification than you'll find on most bottles, the DOC designation does not guarantee that you'll like the wine more. If the virtue of Prosecco is that it's lively, clean and fresh, then the IGT designation, which is most prevalent, fills the bill. Still, if you're looking for an upgrade in terms of ripeness and a bit more weight on the palate, the area within the Veneto that carries the best quality reputation labels its wine "Prosecco di Conegliano-Valdobbiadene." The vineyards at Valdobbiadene sit at higher elevations and the climate is cooler than it is elsewhere in the Prosecco production zones, leading to grapes with more potential structure and acidity. There's a further subdivision based on geography. Wines from Cartizze, a tiny zone within Valdobbiadene, are considered the most prestigious. Most are quite dry, however, meaning that they're not in the style that defines Prosecco and its charms for the average aficionado. IB

WED./NOV. 10

Books & Poetry: Dry Wit

Instead of collapsing under the baggage of growing up with an alcoholic father, eventual adoption by his mother's therapist, and an unstable adolescence spent pill-popping with an eccentric extended family, Augusten Burroughs parlayed the story of his troubled youth into the satiric, best-selling memoir Running with Scissors. A few years later, the recovering alcoholic again proved his knack for painting painful experiences in a humorous light with his second memoir, Dry, which chronicled his road to sobriety. Now a critics' darling and reliable literary wit, the western Mass. resident has poured his self-deprecating humor into his latest book, Magical Thinking: True Stories, a collection of musings on his own bumpy road. Fans have two opportunities to hear the scribe read from Magical Stories Nov. 10, first at the Harvard Coop and later in the evening at the Attic at the Union Street Bar as part of the Newtonville Books in the Attic series. Harvard Coop, 1400 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-499-2000), 12:30 pm. Union Street Bar, 107 R Union St., Newton (617-244-6619). 7:30 pm.
